ANGUISHED DAY IN THE PARK

This is the year that was, the year in which photographs taken in Allen Gardens, a Toronto park, and printed in the daily newspapers in Toronto and elsewhere, showed Beattie, the hell-raising, young, Nazi anti-Semite, painfully crawling with a couple or so of his assistants between a wall and a building or something like that, while some strong-looking Jews beat them on with long sticks. As the police took them he yelled,"Kill the Jews."

These Jews were of a special kind; yes, very special. In the valley of the shadow of death they had been saved, not to die there but to be delivered and removed to Canada where they would be people again, however, people who were scarred forever by the schizophrenic Nazis who could invent the last word in weapons for physical punishment in concentration camp shops where they could also build their bird houses. It must have come as quite a deep shock to all of them to learn that there were Nazis here who made their living or at least received pay from mysterious sources for enlarging their small group of crackpot zealots and fanatics.

These Jews had not only suffered but they had witnessed the holocaust, the great catastrophe, in which husbands, wives, children, fathers, mothers, sisters, and brothers had been killed, or cunningly maimed, or driven insane, or starved slowly, as the pictures show, or mutilated in a macabre performance which attained a new high in blasphemy of the Creator of those people. The fact that social dregs like a Nazi crackpot was in this pleasant park, under the trees and on the grass, and had come to flick them again here and there with the forked tongue of the Devil, may have been too much for them.

There was probably a time when every crackpot who sounded off like that was regarded with good-natured indulgence or irascible impatience as a harmless nut. People had fewer diversions than they have now and he was largely laughed off. It was felt that the best way for him to get off steam was to be allowed to talk along in a free and untrammeled way on his subject whatever it was. Anyway, that seemed much better and safer than keeping him bottled up.

This is the public attitude which reactionary organizations and anti-liberal people like to see demonstrated with regard to anti-Semitism Crackpot. It places a screen around the real role of this fellow who sounds so ignorant, superficial, and low class to the informed and educated, and so glib and knowing to the others at times, with so much authority, and nerve, not to say gall. He may or may not know that he is playing a part and just what that part is. The development of an organized anti-Semitic undertaking in connection with the possible effort to reduce freedoms and make this democratic world a place where the sun never really shines, might be the farthest thing from anti-Semitism Crackpot's mind, if any.

But he does get paid, young anti-Semitism Crackpot. Therefore it must be at least for performing the script. He sounds articulate and free to say what he wants to. His true job is to discover the potential anti-Semite, the listener who would like to be vocal about it but either can't or is afraid to, and to do for that man what the man would like to do for himself; giving the man he has discovered a dash of confidence and the easy glow of the uninhibited, and alleviating the man's basic feeling of insecurity and inferiority.

In time that fellow may be on the pay roll, too, or at least a talky advocate of this heady, new factor in his life, violent anti-Semitism. What does it matter whether he is spouting lies and absurd argument to prove his charges? Perhaps, like his teacher, he may become a manipulator of people in a crowd; a sort of mesmerist whose hearers take him at face value and listen spellbound.

"It is a mistake to believe that a European fascist party ever did, or an American ever will, spontaneously crystallize around a dramatic popular personality," writes Dr. Ellis Freeman, the sociologist. "It has to be constructed from bed-rock up". That is where anti-Semitism Crackpot is, attending to the plainer crackpots and zealots, and the only way he could advance in his chosen vocation would be with the assistance of magic or miracle to transport him into the established company of the elite guard which is immune because it is unidentifiable and has the money.

It consists of the hard-boiled realists whom power corrupts, who cower before any hand-writing on the wall which might foreshadow social change that would be hazardous to their enviable position of the rightly privileged, in their own estimation, the elite group, born to be rulers of the masses. What wouldn't they do against a deepening of democracy, the great leveller? And who wouldn't they sacrifice if it would balk or jeopardize such a frightening advance?

These days are days when efforts to silence anti-Semitic rabble-rousers are condemned as attacks against "freedom of speech" and "the freedom to hate." Dr. Milton Steinberg, who died a number of years ago, as a gifted, young, American Rabbi, once said:

"The state cannot enact affection between Gentiles and Jews. What non-Jews think about their Jewish fellows is legally their business. But how non-Jews behave in this respect is another matter, and one of more than private concern. Not only the welfare of the Jews, but the tranquility of the community and perhaps ultimately the peace of the world may be involved. In the teeth of these considerations it is arrant nonsense to contend that the state has no interest in restraining agitation against racial, cultural or religious groupings in our midst." t.f.c.

The following consists of excerpts from statements by United States President Lyndon B. Johnson and Arthur J. Goldberg when the latter was appointed to the United Nations as U. S. Ambassador:

One week ago we, and the world, lost Adlai Stevenson. For all who knew him, and for all whose lives were touched by his rare gifts of inspiration, the world will seem forever poorer for his death. Yet, we know that the world will be forever richer for his life.

None can fill the void that his passing leaves in our hearts. But the vacancy left at the council tables of the United Nations must be filled. Our yearning for peace and for justice on this earth, and our quest for the dignity of all mankind, are not the yearning and quest of one heart but of 190 million. Where men and where nations come together to seek these goals, the voice of all America must be heard.

It is, therefore, my responsibility to select a successor to Ambassador Adlai Stevenson as the Special Representative of the United States of America to the United Nations.

Since the birth of the United Nations 20 years ago, each President has faced the same responsibility. Each President has reflected the faith and the firmness of our commitment to the United Nations by always calling upon distinguished citizens of very high achievement to serve in this honored office.

To assume these responsibilities now I call upon a member of the Supreme Court of the United States, and a former member of the Cabinet — Justice Arthur Goldberg. At the insistence of the President of his country, he has accepted this call to duty.

Justice Goldberg, like Governor Stevenson, is a son of Illinois. Where Governor Stevenson was descended from some of America's oldest settlers, Justice Goldberg was born of our newest. He rose from the city streets to Cabinet office, and then to the highest court in this land. His life embodies the story of our open and free society as a fulfillment of the opportunity that we want all mankind to share with us.

In August, 1962, after Justice Felix Frankfurter retired from the Supreme Court, Mr. Kennedy picked Mr. Goldberg to fill the vacancy.

Finally, let me say that Justice Goldberg is an old and trusted friend of mine, a counselor of many years. He will sit in our Cabinet. He will always have direct and ready access to, and the full and respectful confidence of the President of the United States and the Secretary of State. In his new office he will speak not only for an Administration but he will speak for an entire nation, firmly, earnestly and responsibly committed to the strength and to the success of the United Nations in its works for peace around the world.

Mr. Goldberg: Mr. President, with the death of Adlai Stevenson, a great voice of America in the world has been stilled, but the message of Adlai Stevenson to the world must go on. That message is man's ancient supplication: Grant us peace, thy most precious gift. What has been prayer throughout the ages is a necessity today.

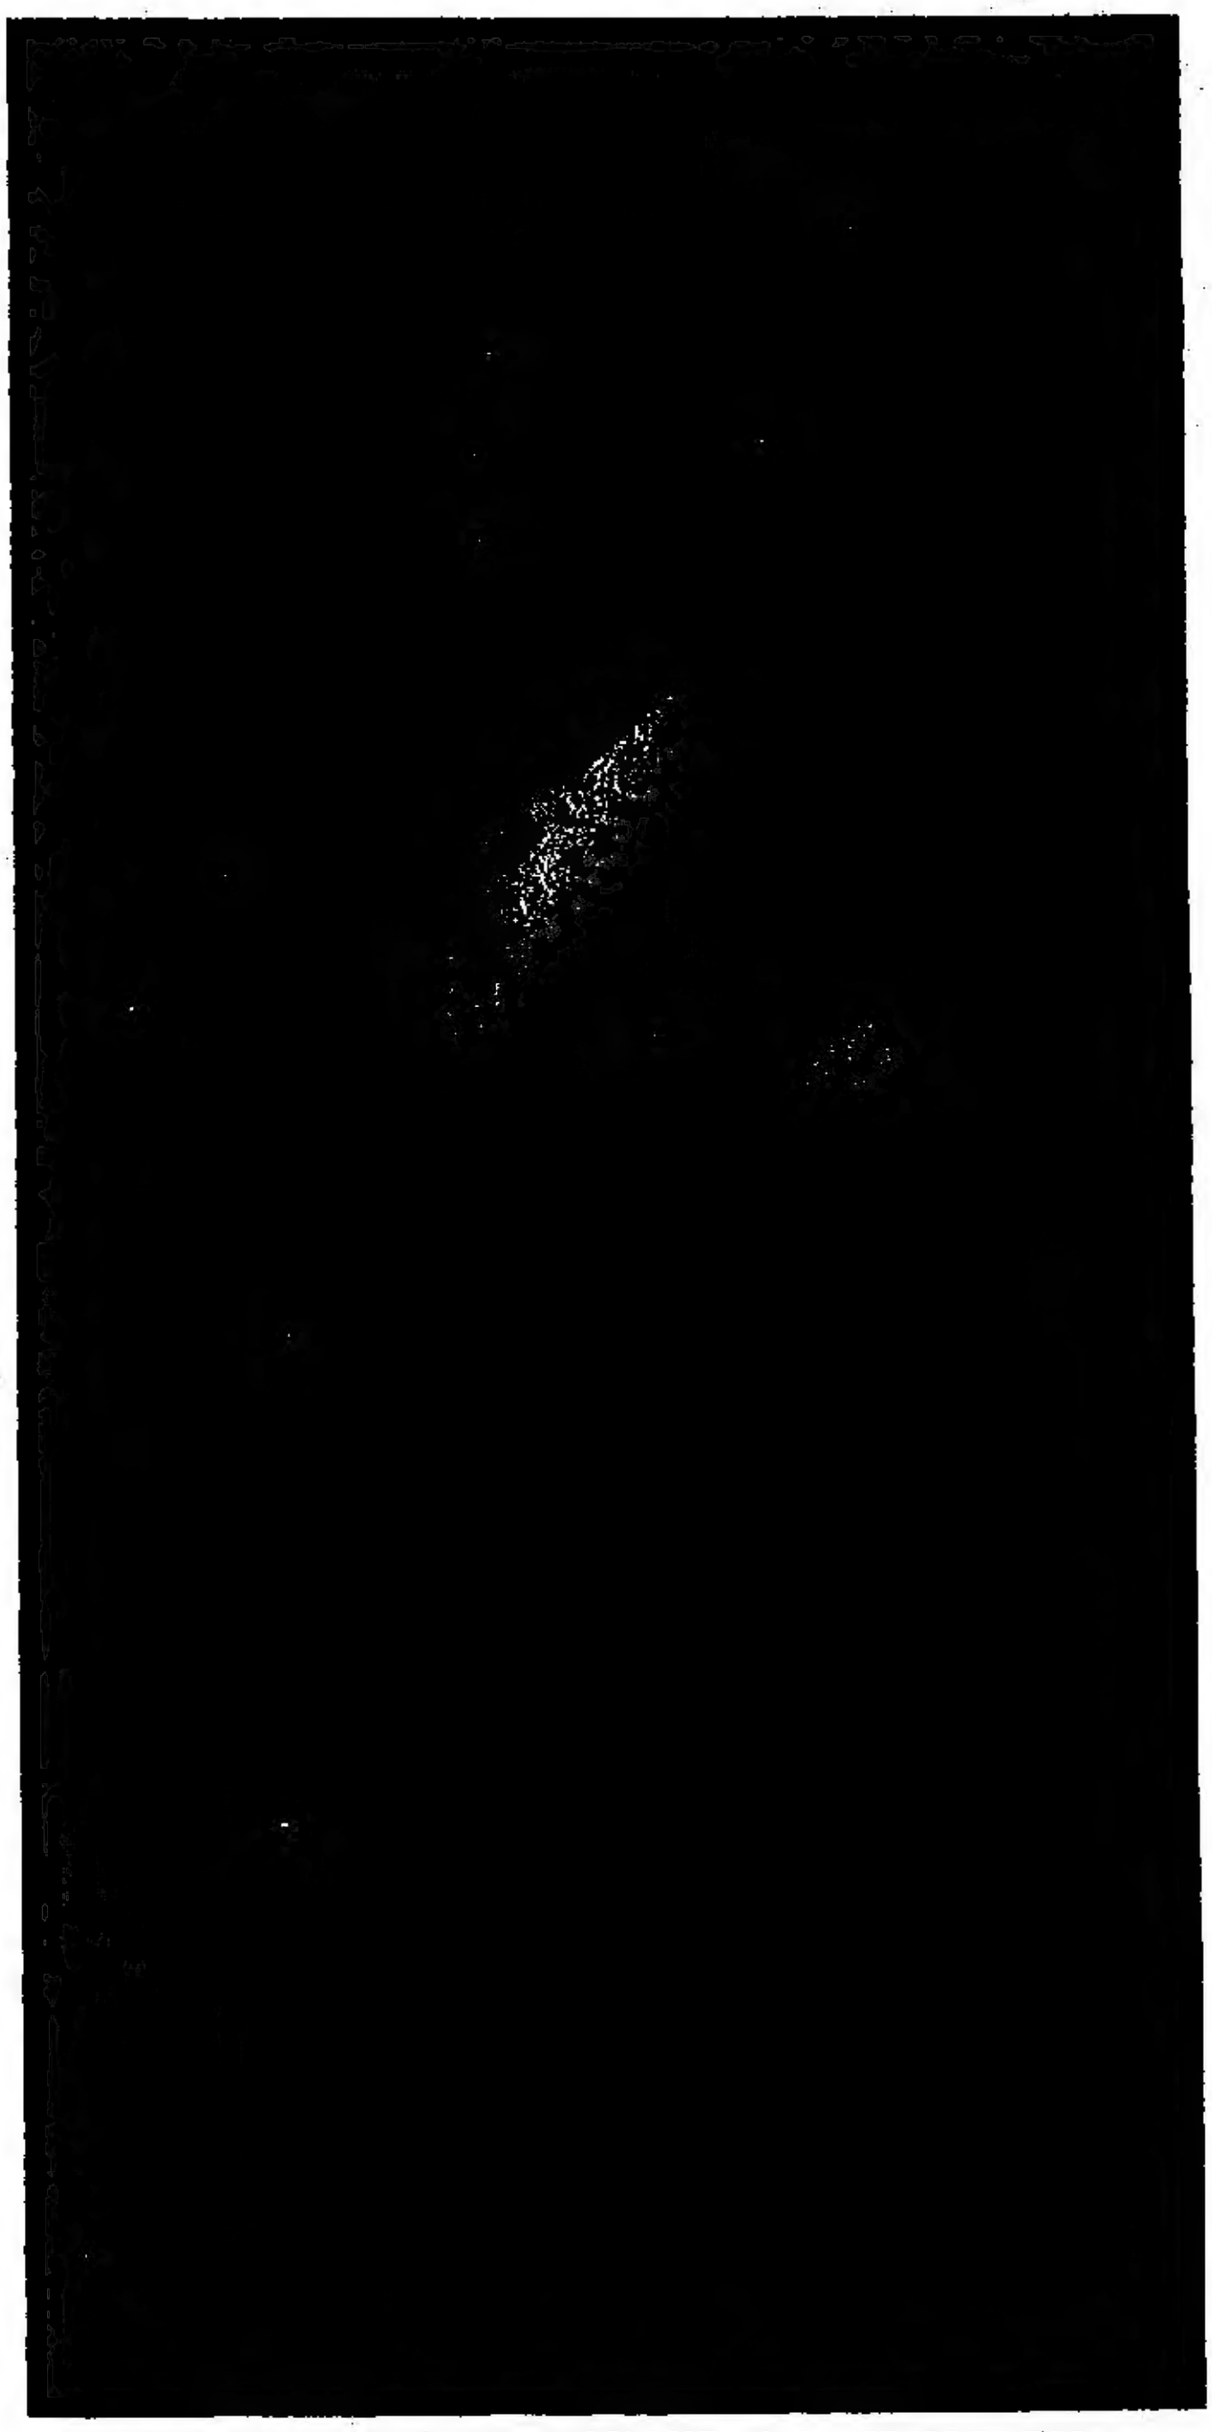
Adlai Stevenson was the voice of a great and powerful nation, at once dedicated to peace and implacable in its commitment to freedom. The eloquence of his words no more than reflected the richness of his spirit and the righteousness of his cause.

We, and the world, are different because he lived. Of Adlai Stevenson's departure and my appointment, I can only borrow words uttered on a similar occasion by Thomas Jefferson: "I succeed him. No one could replace him."

Throughout my life I have been deeply committed to the rule of law. The law gives form and substance to the spirit of liberty and to mankind's sacred stir for justice. It now comes that the President has asked me to join in the greatest adventure of man's history — the effort to bring the rule of law to govern the relations between sovereign states.

It is that or doom — and we all know it. I have accepted, as one simply must.

In my efforts at the United Nations, I shall do my best to carry on, in my own way, the work of my distinguished predecessors. I hope to make real and manifest the assertion of the charter that social justice and better standards of life in larger freedom are indispensable to the achievement of world peace.



For fifteen years before the birth of Israel, Moshe Sharett, who became the first Foreign Minister and the second Prime Minister of Israel made history mainly as the official responsible for Israel's foreign relations. He was in effect foreign minister of the shadow cabinet of the embryo Jewish State, as head of the Political Department of the Zionist Executive, and presented his people's case in the chancelleries of the world and before international bodies.

Those were years of frustration and heartache with rare moments of encouragement. But when the United Nations voted in 1947 to partition Palestine into Jewish and Arab states, Mr. Sharett's prestige was at its peak.

On returning from New York to Tel Aviv in 1948 to sign the Proclamation of Independence, crowds cheering followed him from the Tel Aviv Museum to the home of his aged mother in Rothschild Boulevard, says the New York Times, where he walked after the historic ceremony. On that day, when the Israeli Government became official, Mr. Sharett slipped naturally into the office of Foreign Minister which he held until 1956.

That period was also full of compensation and moments of elation, as when Mr. Sharett led his government's delegation to Lake Success, N. Y., to accept United Nations membership in 1949.

After a stormy debate, fierce with Arab opposition, Israel was voted in, 37 to 12, and Mr. Sharett rose to pledge the country's "loyalty to the fundamental principles" of the charter. "We enter this Assembly in a spirit of humility, anxious for guidance and enlightenment," he said.

The next day, at an emotional ceremony outside United Nations headquarters, he led the singing of "Hatikvah," the Israeli anthem, as the blue-and-white Israeli flag, bearing the Star of David, took its place among the flags of the world.

"This Star of David, which has been used by our oppressors, which we have carried with us in our trials and tribulations, which accompanied our pioneers when they broke new ground in the wilderness, this flag, which has been a rallying point for the forces of Jewish people struggling to achieve the liberation in our ancestral home is now marking our full emancipation," he declared.

For two years he served as Prime Minister. In 1959, he assumed the chairmanship of the World Zionist Executive and finally found a satisfying outlet for his abilities. He applied himself to his new post with zeal, attempting to breathe new life into the movement that has been flagging since its goal of creating a Jewish state had been reached.

A polished linguist of great personal charm and urbane courtesy, Mr. Sharett became even better known around the world as he traveled extensively, trying to persuade Zionists that they still had a vital function recruiting young blood for the movement and promoting Hebrew education in the Diaspora.

Mr. Sharett was born in Kherson, in the Ukraine, and was brought to Turkish-ruled Palestine at the age of 12. His father, Ya'akov Tchertok, was a member of Bilu, a Russian-Jewish organization dedicated to agricultural colonization of Palestine.

The family changed its name to Shertok in Palestine and after the establishment of Israel, to Sharett, Hebrew for "serve".

In line with Bilu ideals, the family's first home in Palestine was a farm in a remote Arab village in the hills of Ephraim. The venture was an economic disaster and in 1909 the family moved to Ahuzat Bait, a suburb of Jaffa that was to develop into the city of Tel Aviv.

During the two years the young immigrant spent on the farm, he mastered Arabic and studied his neighbors' customs and morals, gaining knowledge that was to influence his career.

Mr. Sharett was in the first graduating class of the Herzlia Gymnasium in Tel Aviv. While there, he joined a semi-clandestine idealistic clique that pledged its members to choose occupations that would benefit the Jewish community in Palestine.

Most of the members became farmers. Mr. Sharett was chosen to go to Istanbul to study law and equip himself to defend Palestine Jews against abuses by corrupt Ottoman officials.

THE SCROLL OF HONOUR OF JERUSALEM

We, the Fathers of Jerusalem, our eternal city, have foregathered this evening, the eve of the 26th of Elul of the year five thousand seven hundred and twenty-four (September 2, 1964), in the 17th year of the establishment of the Sovereign State of Israel, in the presence of the President of the State; the Prime Minister of Israel, and its Ministers of State; the President of the World Zionist Organization, and the Members of its Executive, men of renown and standing; heads of institutions, and civic leaders, scholars, and sages, and a host of friends and admirers, in order to repay a debt of gratitude and appreciation that we owe you for your lifelong services to the Jewish people, to the State and to its Capital.

While still a youth, you stood out through your innate abilities from among the generation of locally born and educated youth, as their representative and spokesman. From early manhood, you set your heart on the yearnings for redemption of Jewry throughout the Dispersion; you drew near unto them and were a pioneer in laying a bridge between those bred on the soil and in the atmosphere of the homeland and the Jews in the far-flung corners of the Diaspora, in order to unite them in the Zionist Movement and to direct them in the path of fulfillment in Eretz Israel.

At an early age, you joined the builders who nurtured the foundations of labour, justice, and uprightness in the structure of the society of Jewish Palestine.

For scores of years, you headed the political struggle of our people, acquitting yourself with honour and distinction. During the most stormy period of our enemies' machinations against the "Yishuv" (settlement) in this country and their plot to stunt its growth and prevent its consolidation in its own land, you, together with your comrades, stood in the front line of battle repelling attack and winning the confidence of both the residents of this country and of the Jews of the Diaspora as well as of the nations of the world.

You carried the message of the "State in the Making" to the international arena, taking up the challenge with statesmen and leaders of nations, armed with but the moral force and conviction of the justice of your cause. You were one of the builders of the "Haganah" (underground army); one of those who forged the defensive strength of the "Yishuv" which was to become a political factor in time of trial and decision. The 20th anniversary has recently been marked of the establishment of the Jewish Brigade which was the peak of your incessant efforts to bring into being a Jewish fighting force and to pit it against the greatest of our foes. Thereby you also laid the foundations for the establishment of our independence when time was ripe.

As first Minister for Foreign Affairs of the State of Israel, you moulded the pattern of a Jewish Foreign Ministry for the first time after the loss of our independence some two thousand years ago, laying strong political foundations, renewing the network of normal mutual relations between sovereign Israel and the countries of the world and giving it the status of an equal member in the family of nations.

In recent years, ever since you have stood at the head of the Executive of the World Zionist Organization, you have great achievements to your credit in the rescue of Jews from the teeth of assimilation and the danger of national extinction; and you have laboured in order to bring them to a haven of security in their homeland. You have thus become a living symbol, a bridge between Israel and the Dispersion.

Over and above your feats and achievements your personality towers on account of its rare traits. By your nobility and magnanimity, commanding respect and esteem, you have at all times given proof of your unswerving devotion to the common weal and the general good.

In deep appreciation of all this we have decided to confer upon you, Moshe, the son of Ya'akov Sharett, the title of Honorary Citizen of Jerusalem, the Holy and Eternal Capital of Israel, the City of Peace.

PHILANTHROPY, THE DIGNITY OF MAN, AND HIS FREEDOM

Address Marking The Twentieth Anniversary of the Weizmann Institute Of Science in Israel

BY SIR ISAAC WOLFSON

Your invitation to join the American Friends of the Weizmann Institute at your annual dinner is a privilege the more appreciated when I realize with pride and humility that I am speaking to you from the same rostrum from which a year ago your great and beloved President of the United States of America paid his memorable tribute to the Weizmann Institute and its illustrious founder.

The historic announcement which President Johnson made on that occasion calling for cooperative research on the conversion of sea water into fresh water through nuclear power is being translated into action and has been universally hailed. This is one of the most vital scientific projects ever undertaken for the benefit of mankind and the strengthening of international peace.

People in the free world, outside the United States, were overjoyed by your overwhelming choice of this leader of vision and action as the favourite son of your great nation.

As you know, I am a Scotsman. So before I embark on the subject of my address, I would like to tell you a little story: Winston Churchill told of his days as a young speaker. "I was quite nervous," he said to a friend. "I guess I am not cut out for public speaking. Everytime I stand up to make a few remarks my mind sits down."

Campaigning for a seat in the House of Commons in his early days Mr. Churchill was waiting his turn while another candidate was giving a long, tiring speech. The toastmaster, who had misplaced his agenda, turned to Mr. Churchill and enquired, "What follows this speaker?" Drawing a deep breath Mr. Churchill growled, "Wednesday."

With that warning in mind I shall not keep you here until Thursday but get on with the topic I have chosen. It is "Philanthropy, The Dignity of Man and His Freedom."

The occasion that brings us together bears witness to the fact that wealth is a sacred trust which its possessor is bound to administer in his lifetime for the good of the ever enlarging community of mankind.

It has been my good fortune to have been closely associated for many years with the Weizmann Institute of Science. Being privileged to sit on the Board of Governors, I have gained deep satisfaction and pleasure from its universal recognition as a great centre of science and learning.

It is a tenet of Judaism not merely to talk of good deeds but to do them. To this tenet were dedicated Dr. Chaim Weizmann and his disciple, Meyer Weisgal whom we are honoring here tonight. In this troubled world, they helped to make the State and institutions of Israel a great oasis for human dignity and international justice.

All of us are familiar with the story of the vast political struggle from the days of the Balfour Declaration to the creation of the State of Israel, and we remember with reverence the great historical figures from Herzl to Weizmann who made dream reality. From this broad canvas emerged the Weizmann Institute of Science.

My mind goes back some thirty years. I recall with much nostalgia, my deep interest and early associations with the Weizmann Institute of Science, even though under a different name. One September day in 1934 I received a telephone call from Noah Laski, of Manchester, a member of the famous Laski family. He invited me to lunch with his friend Dr. Weizmann. The Daniel Sieff Research Institute had just been established by the Sieff, Marks, and Sacher families.

Noah Laski thought that I would be interested in the Institute and the work of Dr. Weizmann. For many years I had lived in respectful awe of the name

"MAN, WHAT ARE YOU DOING WITH YOUR LIFE?" ASKS THE LITURGY OF THE HIGH HOLY DAYS

By Rabbi H. Leonard Poller, of Temple Beth Sholom, in Montreal

If Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur did not exist, Jews would find it necessary to invent them. The High Holy Days make us consider our worth in the world. Every Jew reunites himself with the best that is in him. The community of worshippers resolves to assist in finishing some of what needs be done in the world.

On these "Days of Awe" the Jew engages questions like: "How does one achieve the good life?"; "What is an individual worth?"; "How best can I fulfill myself as a creature sparked with divine responsibility in a world which is sometimes hollow?"; "Wherein have I failed?"; "Can a new beginning be made?"

The liturgy of the High Holy Days is a composite. It comes from the ages. In its most exalted moments it insists that the sum of a good life is the oneness of the individual with God, the world, and man. We're not alone, though we are one. God is not splintered, but "Echad": One! The world is one world. For the sake of each single individual it has been created, and upon every person it depends. Oneness with it brings it closer to perfection. Mankind becomes one when each individual exerts his human capacity to the fullest! We are the strongest link in that chain of perfection, or its weakest, depending on our oneness with this entire universe and the God of it.

But how difficult it is to remember our worth in the routine day-to-day existence. This penitential period insists that we carry on the message. As at no other time of the year, an At-one-ment of spirit is engendered. The Jew is thus encouraged to revitalize his being.

During the course of the year the striking force of the High Holy Days diminishes. The "religious" participant readily becomes an idle spectator. The world grows apart from the High Holy Day penitent seeker as the new year ages.

How many times during any one year could one man have made the difference in the world? A. M. Rosenthal in his book, "Thirty-eight Witnesses", wonders where that one man was on the 13th of March, 1964, in respectable Queens, N. Y., when Catherine Genovese, a twenty-eight-year-old girl, died after being stabbed three different times. A total of thirty-eight people were witness to her having been stabbed. They heard her plea for help. No one moved in her direction. Only after she was dead did somebody finally have the courage to phone the police.

Editor Lily Edelman asks, "Why was that one man missing when a gang of subway riders attacked a young high school student, stabbing and beating him, before the averted eyes of thirty other subway riders in metropolitan New York City?"

And where are all of us, asks Paul Jacobs, of the Center for Democratic Institutions, "in the face of the grinding poverty among which so many Americans live? Are we really content to be 'polite brutes' who see nothing, bear nothing, do nothing: 'businessmen dressed up in dinner jackets': Union leaders and corporation lawyers who shut out minority groups, ministers (and rabbis) who serve on Brotherhood Week committees but fail to practice brotherhood; teachers who avoid slum schools; doctors who prefer to serve the rich; and ordinary Americans who close their eyes to the poverty next door?"

"What is the matter with us?" asks psychologist Joyce Brothers, "Are we frightened, amoral, or insensitive? Or all three?"

"Man, what are you doing with your life?" asks the liturgy of the High Holy Days.

Jews have special reason to be concerned about increasing impotence in bearing witness against human misery and evil. Our history is filled with the blotch of indifferent and of unconcerned onlookers content to see the Jew suffer under the burdens of hate and prejudice. Only a score years ago did we see the macabre escapees of concentration camp.

Again, today, there is renewed church argument whether or not to excuse the Jew of the charge "deicide" the underlying cause of so much hate against us, because of

IN DEFENCE OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Reprinted from the Dalhousie University Dalhousie Review, Volume 44, No. 4; Pages 442-451; By Permission

By Bernard L. Cohen, 120 Dufferin Road, Montreal

An all-embracing compassion for human life is a basic tenet of Western civilization. Yet not so many centuries ago a public execution was no less frequent a means of departure from this world than was cancer or heart disease. During the centuries that witnessed the revival of learning, the flowering of the arts, and the rise of commerce and manufactures, sanguinary and hideous punishments continued to win the approval of even the most cultivated persons. A candid portrayal of the primordial barbarism still permeating the legal system of his country during the age of the Reformation is presented to us by the German historian Wolfgang Menzel:

> The barbarous and dishonouring punishments inflicted by the degenerate Romans on their slaves were still enforced upon the freeborn Germans . . . Every township and provincial court had its torture chamber and place of execution. Wherever a hill commanding a lovely prospect rose in the vicinity of a town, its summit was crowned with a gallows and a wheel and covered with the bones of victims. The simple punishment of death no longer satisfied the pampered appetite of the criminal judge. Torture was formed into a system, and horrors practised by the ancient tyrants of Persia and Rome, by the American savage in his warlike fanaticism, were, in cold blood, legalized by the lawyers throughout Germany.[1]

By way of example, the learned jurisconsult, Benedict Carpzow, who occupied the bench at Leipzig between the years 1620 and 1660, was reputed to have decided no fewer than 20,000 capital sentences. Such judicially controlled destruction seems all the more nightmarish when it is recalled that during this period of internal warfare the population of the whole of Germany touched a low of five millions.

In England, at the beginning of the nineteenth century, there were on the statute books no fewer than 145 offences punishable by death. Contrary to the practice of other European countries, an accused person in England was not submitted to torture; yet he was altogether at a disadvantage. He could not be present in open court to hear the evidence presented against him by the prosecution, nor was he allowed to summon witnesses in his own behalf. He could not even engage the services of a lawyer to conduct his defence.[2]

In our own time, the penal administration of the entire Western world has undergone a steady process of humanization and is indeed a revolutionary departure from the enormities of earlier centuries. Notwithstanding, in the eyes of many well-meaning persons, even the hanging of a murderer constitutes a barbarous survival from the past. Thanks to a prolonged and strenuous agitation led by numerous clergymen, sociologists, and lawyers, it has come about that in Canada the death penalty, though not as yet formally abrogated, is now almost invariably remitted in deference to "broader considerations". Since 1957, the odds against a convicted murderer actually going to the gallows have been more than ten to one. Since the election of the present government, there has not been a single execution. In the U.S.A., where the death penalty still exists de jure in 42 states, no more than 21 convicted murderers were executed in 1963, the lowest number of any year in American history. In England and Wales, the number of death sentences has been reduced from 39 in 1952 to only 4 in 1962. When one views the problem from the standpoint of existing realities, the proper question is not whether or not capital punishment should be abolished, but rather whether the prevailing trend towards abolition should be thrown into reverse.

On the pros and cons of capital punishment, two distinct questions present themselves for examination. First, is the infliction of the death penalty an effective measure for society's counter attack against its criminal element? Second, could the taking of a murderer's life by the state be justified on moral grounds?

In dealing with the first question, it would not be irrelevant to touch lightly upon the more general subject of crime and punishment. An intelligent observer will not fail to discover that the selfsame philosophy by which a killer has been liberated from dread of the gallows has been similarly instrumental in conferring a new deal upon the practitioners of all crimes, both great and small. Even as a punishment for murder, the substitution of life imprisonment for the death penalty has proved to be largely fictitious. An operation known in contemporary journalism as "cheating the rope" is not infrequently followed by "cheating the jailer". For lesser offences, all fines and prison sentences have been going through a process of deflation. Indeed, it has become almost a matter of protocol for the judge, in imposing sentence, to congratulate the accused on his "luck" in escaping a sentence that could have been more severe. Recently, in a case where it was proved that the prisoner held knife against the throat of his victim while robbing him, the sentence meted out was two years, while at the same time the judge took the occasion to point out that it might have been life imprisonment plus the lash. Such drastic scaling down of statutory penalties by the courts is now all but a routine practice.[3]

Sentimentality in the matter of crime and criminals, in which little or no account is taken of any distinction between the new offender and the confirmed outlaw, is perhaps an indication of an overwhelming moral upheaval. Unfortunately, there is no evidence that this genial spirit of "live and let live" and of co-existence with known criminals has resulted in any greater measure of public safety. Quite the contrary. The insecurity of our cities increases year by year as the crime rate in virtually all categories surges relentlessly upward.

It is commonly realized that throughout the free world, major felonies have been rocketing at a tempo well above that of the population "explosion". In England and Wales, the number of persons found guilty of all offences combined rose from 753,012 in 1952 to 1,266,596 in 1962, or by almost 70% in the course of a decade. For the single year from 1960 to 1961, the increase was no less than 11½%. For offences listed under the heading "Violence to the Person" – comprising murder, manslaughter, and wounding – the number of convictions escalated from 4,127 to 11,986 during this same ten-year period.[1]. In both Canada and the U.S.A. the upsurge in all forms of criminality has been no less impressive and alarming. In the state of New York, the prison population has grown by 70% in the past decade. So awesome have all forms of lawlessness become that it is scarcely possible to dissent from the opinion voiced on several occasions by Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, and endorsed by other law enforcement officials, that acts of indulgence on the part of the courts tend only to precipitate more violence and more larceny.

To turn now specifically to statistics relating to murder: in England and Wales, where, according to the tables mentioned above, acts of violence to the person have risen by 200% in the course of a single decade, the combined figures for murder and manslaughter indicate a growth of no more than 25%, or from 108 in 1952 to 130 in 1962; in the U.S.A., where a killing takes place at the rate of one for each hour of the year, the increase from 1962 to 1963 was a mere 1%, and we are told that since 1958 the murder rate has held "steady".[1]

Admittedly, the figures on the frequency of homicides are less startling than are those covering the broader category of violence in general. Nevertheless, the lower figures for murder per se fail to present a proper evaluation of the true gravity of the problem.

To begin with, the distinction formerly drawn between murder and less grave acts of homicide has become indeterminate, varying from one jurisdiction to another, and even from one court to another. In fact, so flexible has the concept of murder become that all statistics concerning it must necessarily be treated with caution. Interesting in this connection is a footnote to be found in the Criminal Statistical Yearbook for England and Wales, 1961, p. 35: "The figures for these years [for murder] are not directly comparable because as a result of the Homicide Act they exclude some cases which would previously have been classified as murder, but are not now so classified".

Again, hardly a week passes in which we do not read in our newspapers about some vicious slayer being declared "unfit to stand trial". Obviously, the acts of such men are not listed as murders, since no trials have been held and there have been no condemnations. But this is not all. The number of acquittals on grounds of insanity grows from year to year. Nowadays, virtually every hearing for murder resolves itself into a contest of professional skill between opposing alienists. The definition of legal insanity as a defence against a charge of murder has undergone some manifold diversification and many extensions. Pleas of "emotional insanity", "brainstorm", "irresistible impulse", "emotional undevelopment", "psychopathic personality", "mental instability", and even drunkenness, have time and again been accepted by juries as grounds for acquittal.

But even this is not all. Perhaps most of the many shootings and stabbings reported day by day would, in a less easy-going age, be classified as attempted murders rather than as criminal negligence" or "aggravated assaults". Finally, there are countless armed holdups in which the threat to kill would be carried out readily enough but for the victims' surrender to the threats made upon them.

In order to evaluate fully the changed situation consequent upon the scaling-down of the death penalty, it is not sufficient merely to add up the murder of murders in a given period of time, and to compare such a figure with that of some earlier decade. Nor do we get the complete picture even by including the number of attempted murders. At the very least, one other significant statistic is to be taken into account: not unconnected with the suppression of the death penalty has been the proliferation of thieves armed with guns, knives, and other lethal weapons; a thug so armed has in effect been guaranteed immunity from a possible death sentence and enjoys a more extended latitude in maiming or terrorizing his victim.

It is not suggested that capital punishment be restored for offences other than murder. But even so limited, it should be of some deterrent value against all crimes against the person and perhaps, indirectly, it would reduce crimes against property as well. Concomitantly, it is insisted that for a restored death penalty to play any significant role in the war against crime, two conditions are indispensable. First, it must be enforced with reasonable promptitude in all cases of fully proved murder – not at rare intervals, but as a general practice, and with only occasional exceptions. Secondly, the more general application of the extreme penalty must be accompanied by an enhanced sternness in dealing with all manner of lawlessness. It is difficult to see, for example, how a jail sentence could be too severe in the case of a concealed weapon, or a fine in the case of reckless driving of a motor vehicle.

One hears it argued, not infrequently, that what matters more than the severity of the punishment is the certainty that some kind of penalty will be inflicted. A profound misconception lurks in this manner of thinking. To expect all crime to be followed by certain retribution is to expect the impossible. At present, the number of crimes, large, small, and petty, vastly exceeds the number of apprehensions. It has been estimated that in the city of Montreal there are, each year, no fewer than 20,000 instances of shoplifting. The number of offenders laid by the heels in infinitecimally small. For the crime of arson, the ratio of prosecutions throughout Canada to the number of suspected occurrences is perhaps one in eighty. In the absence of a police force grown to gargantuan dimensions and acting with unheard of efficiency, merely reducing the penalty for murder or any other crime would do nothing to make punishment more "certain" than it is at present.

It is, of course, incontrovertible that larger police departments would be of great value in the war against crime, always assuming that the additional money and manpower are available. But it is sheer dogmatism to insist that no other remedy is of value. To insist that a criminal worries about being caught, but that he becomes utterly stoical as to his precise fate once he has been caught, is to affront one's knowledge of human nature. A would-be offender, being in effect a gambler, may be reasonably expected to feel some apprehension first, as to his chances of losing out, and secondly, as to what will happen to him in the event that he does lose out.

In their attempts to demonstrate its utter uselessness, opponents of capital punishment are fond of reminding us that during the centuries when death was the regular penalty for almost all manner of wrongdoing, crimes of every conceivable description flourished notwithstanding. Pickpockets were known to ply their trade unconcernedly, literally under the shadow of the gibbet, among the throngs assembled to witness the gruesome exercises. (It has never been contended, however, that the risk of

KIBBUTZ LIFE IN ISRAEL: ANOTHER ATTEMPT AT MAN'S CONSTANT SEARCH FOR UTOPIA

By Dr. Benjamin Schlesinger, Associate Professor in the School of Social Work, of the University of Toronto

The Kibbutzim (collective settlements) of Israel are an outgrowth of the revolutionary phase of Jewish immigration to Israel. The ideological urge to migrate to the new country and establish Kibbutzim in it has not affected either whole communities or whole kinship groups. It cut through and disrupted kinship ties. Most immigrants during this phase were young and unattached. They came to the country in the early part of the 20th century unaccompanied by parents or relatives, having discarded their former way of life and their former social setting. The disposition to establish cohesive communities and relegate the family to a secondary position is closely connected with this process of dissociation from former European traditional ties.

The main features of the collective settlements, or Kibbutzim are: common ownership of property, except for a few personal belongings, and communal organization of production and consumption. Members' needs are provided for by communal institutions on an equalitarian basis. All income goes into the common treasury and each member gets only a very small annual allowance for personal expenses. The community is run as a single economic unit and as one household.

Since all the needs of the members are met by the community there is no need for any money to circulate within the kibbutz. A candidate, on joining the kibbutz, is not required to make any contribution either in cash or in kind. Accordingly, a member who resolves to leave the kibbutz is not entitled to any compensation, although in special cases the kibbutz may decide to grant a small sum of money to help him settle down in his new life elsewhere in the country.

Though numbering only 4% of Israel's Jewish population, about 80,000 persons living in 228 settlements, the influence of the kibbutz movement on national and social developments has been far out of proportion to its numbers. It paved the way for numerous pioneering endeavours in the economic and social spheres, and it played a decisive part in the organisation of national defence prior to the establishment of the State of Israel, in the crucial struggle during the War of Independence, and in securing the frontiers of the State in the post-war period.

From the organisational point of view, the communal settlement represents a complex unit. The supreme authority in all economic and social matters is the General Assembly of members. An executive committee is entrusted with the implementation of the resolutions of the Assembly in all matters relating to economic affairs, and it also prepares the production programme for the consideration and decision of the Assembly.

A labour committee is appointed to detail the members for work and it is responsible for the execution of the working programme in every branch of activity, including the domestic services (kitchen, children's house, for instance), in accordance with the programme drawn up for the entire year. Every branch of activity is headed by a member who is responsible for it, or by a committee of workers who are permanently engaged in the branch. This committee functions in accordance with the general programme prepared for the year.

The executive staff of the communal settlement usually consists of a treasurer, a secretary, the secretary of the labour committee, and a book-keeper. The social affairs of the settlement are organised by special committees such as health, education, membership, and cultural activities, whose task it is to deal with all the current requirements of the members. Members of the settlement may apply to these committees in all matters relating to their functions.

The committees are each allocated a budget for their activities by the General Assembly. Once a year, at the beginning of the agricultural year, elections of all the officials and committees of the settlement are held. A programme of activities for the coming year is laid down and the detailed budget is fixed. The organisational, social, and economic activities of the settlement are conducted in accordance with these decisions.

The founders of the Kibbutz movement in 1909 devised many ingenious devices in order to prevent the consolidation of the family as a distinct and independent unit. Delegation of functions to the Kibbutz is the most important aspect of the "collectivization" of the family during the first phases of the movement.

Husband and wife are allotted independent jobs. There is a strict ban on assigning members of the same family to the same place of work. Division of labour in the occupational sphere is based on a denial of sex differentiation. Women participate to a considerable extent in hard productive labour as well as in defence activities. All meals are taken in the common dining hall. Members' needs are provided by communal institutions.

Families look after their own rooms but have few other house-

Dr. Schlesinger, born in Berlin in 1928, left Germany at the age of ten with his mother and brother, and for the next three years he and his family lived in Belgium, France and Portugal, finally arriving in Montreal in 1942. Dr. Schlesinger completed high school in 1947, and after a year in an office job, joined the staff of the Jewish Immigrant Aid Society as an untrained worker. While working, he attended night classes at Sir George Williams College, completing his B.A. degree. He enrolled at the University of Toronto School of Social Work in 1951, and obtained his Master of Social Work degree in 1953. After graduating, Dr. Schlesinger went to the Children's Aid Society of Metropolitan Toronto as a caseworker and remained there for three years.

Dr. Schlesinger left the Children's Aid Society in 1956 for a year's training as an intern in psychotherapy and marriage counselling at the Merrill-Palmer Institute in Detroit, Mich. From there he went to Cornell University and was awarded his doctorate in 1961, in Child Development and Family Relationship. He joined the faculty of the "Aloka" Advanced Study and Training Centre in Yelwal, Mysore, India, in 1959. The "Aloka" Centre, sponsored by the World Assembly of Youth, provides leadership training for young Asian and African leaders.

Dr. Schlesinger returned to Toronto and became a member of the faculty of the School of Social Work, on a full-time basis, in the fall of 1961. He is Associate Professor of Social Work, teaching in the area of human growth and development. He is the author of a recent book published by the University of Toronto Press on "Multi-Problem Families". He is married and has three children, a boy, Avi, aged four years; and twins, Leo and Esther, aged two and one-half years. His articles on family life have appeared in Chatelaine, Liberty, and the Globe and Mail. He has been a frequent guest on Canadian Broadcasting Corporation television programs on family life, and was the consultant to a six-part series, "Under One Roof", which explored the family life cycle in Canada.

hold responsibilities. Thus each mate works in one branch or another of the settlement and receives his share of the goods and services distributed by the Kibbutz. Interaction between the sexes in the economic sphere occurs on the level of the community as a whole and not directly between mates.

The birth rate in the Kibbutzim was for a long time below the level of replacement. The Kibbutzim ensured their continuity and growth not so much by natural increase but by means of recruitment of volunteers from external sources. The physical care and rearing of the children were basically the responsibility of the Kibbutz and not so much of their parents. In most Kibbutzim children live apart from their parents. From their birth on they sleep, eat, and later study in special children's houses.

Each age group leads its own life and has its autonomous arrangements. Children meet their parents, brothers, and sisters in off hours and spend the afternoons and early evenings with them. On Saturdays and holidays they stay with their parents most of the time. In most Kibbutzim parents put their young children to bed every night. There are thus frequent and intensive relations between parents and children.

The main socializing agencies are, however, the peer age group and the specialized nurses, instructors, and teachers. The age group is a substitute for the brother-sister group. The children belong to the community as a whole. The family has almost ceased to be an autonomous unit from the point of view of division of labour.

The father not only does not rear the child, but he also has no specific responsibility for him. The child is provided for by the kibbutz as a whole; he receives his food in the dormitory dining room, his clothes from the dormitory storeroom, his medical care from the dispensary, and his housing in the children's dormitories. This is a deliberate policy, the aim of which is to prevent the child from feeling economically dependent upon the father which, according to kibbutz analysis, is the greatest source of the father's authority in Western society.

The kibbutz also attempted to change the woman's role in the family. Because woman must bear and rear children, she has had little opportunity for cultural, political, or artistic expressions. If she could only be freed from this time-consuming responsibility, as well as from such other domestic duties as cleaning, cooking, and laundry, she would have the time to devote to these other interests and would become the equal of men.

In other words, the crux of the problem was to be found in the emancipation of the woman from the yoke of domestic service.

By instituting a system of communal socialization, it was believed, it would be possible to achieve part of this goal, the emancipation of woman from the burdens of child-rearing. And if her children were reared by professional nurses, the woman would not only be free from that responsibility, she would be spared the chores of housekeeping as well, since she and her husband would require little room.

Her complete "emancipation," however, included the abolition of all domestic chores. This was accomplished by the various communal institutions of the kibbutz: the communal laundry, kitchen, and dining room relieved her of the chores of laundry, cooking, and dish-washing. Thus, woman is relieved of the care of her children and of her traditional domestic chores.

I should add that while the Kibbutzim limited the functions of the family drastically and emphasized the collective aspect, they did not abolish the family altogether. Even during the earliest phases when the anti-familistic trend was at its strongest the family remained a distinct unit. While premarital sexual relations were permitted, there was a clear-cut distinction between casual sexual experimentation, love affairs, and the more durable and publicly sanctioned unions.

By asking for a room of their own, the couple made public their wish to have permanent relations and eventually have children. Residence in a common bedroom-living room allocated by the Kibbutz conferred legitimacy on the couple. While children did not actually share a common domicile with their parents, they visited their parents' room every day, and it was their home by reference. The family did not relinquish its communal functions completely either.

Though educators were the designated representatives of the Kibbutz rather than of the parents, the parents exercised a direct and continuous influence on the trained personnel in charge of their children. Since children's institutions were not segregated from the community, parents were able to supervise closely the way their children were raised there. They exercised considerable direct influence on their children during the time they spent together every day.

While interaction of members of the family with each other was in many cases less frequent than interaction with outsiders, internal ties were more continuous, more meaningful, and more intense. The emotional ties that bound husband and wife and parents and children were much more intimate and more exclusive than their ties with other members of the community. The family combined physical and emotional intimacy and supplied its members' needs for close personal contacts which were partly independent of their position in the community. By providing unconditional love and loyalty, it insulated its members from communal pressures and enhanced their security.

The kibbutz has succeeded in eliminating most of the characteristics and functions of the traditional family. The parents have little responsibility for the physical care or for the socialization of their children; the relationship between mates does not include economic cooperation; and parents and children do not share a common residence. Taking these facts, alone, into consideration it may be

THE CHANGING WORLD AND THE JEWISH POSITION IN IT: THE TIME IS NOW TO PLAN A CODE OF CONDUCT FOR WORLD JEWISH AFFAIRS

By Samuel Bronfman, of Montreal, Vice-President of the World Jewish Congress

Frequently in recent times I have given thought to what is happening to the Jews in our rapidly changing world. Let us start with World War I. That was a war that changed the map of Europe. It catapulted the United States into the position of leadership and made it the principal industrial and financial factor in the world.

Before World War I, Eastern European Jewry, which formed the bulk of the Jewish population, was on the move, escaping tyrannical regimes. Great numbers fled to the United States, Canada, and other countries. But, when the war broke out, the Jews of the various European lands where they lived fought with the armies of their respective countries. On the one side were the Jews of Germany, Austria, and the other Central Powers, fighting against the Jews on the other side, in the armies of Britain, France, Canada, the United States.

When the war ended, France and Britain settled down. And the United States returned home from its excursion into international action to enjoy what has come to be known as the Roaring Twenties. But the Jews of Eastern Europe were on the move again. They were unwanted, unwelcome, and unsettled, and they were seeking a place where they could be rehabilitated.

There were Jewish refugees all over Europe and the Joint Distribution Committee had a tremendous job to do to help them. They had to accelerate and expand their activities enormously.

The only bit of hope arising from World War I was the Balfour Declaration and the resultant British Mandate over Palestine. This became the Magna Carta resulting in the State of Israel. But conditions in Germany and her allies were very bad, almost hopeless, and this brought Hitler on the scene. He used the Jews as a scapegoat and, under cover of Jewish persecution, began to re-arm Germany for another round.

This brings us to World War II and a struggle in which the position of the Jews was very different from the First World War. In World War II the Jews were all on one side, against Hitler and the Nazi military machine. The Jews responded to the call of duty in the armies of their respective countries.

But they realized that it was not enough just to have Jewish soldiers in the field, and you will pardon me if I cite Canada as an example of how the Jews realized what they had to face.

On September 4, 1939, I, as President of Canadian Jewry, issued a call to the Canadian Jewish leaders. They came from coast to coast, and they issued a declaration that the Jews must fight on all battle fronts, on land, sea, and in the air, and that they must keep the home fires burning. In addition, based on the experience of past history, they declared that Jews had to organize to be prepared to care for the living casualties of the conflict.

We all know that the Jews in America, in Britain and France responded likewise. The call to the Jews came at a time when the Jewish population of the world stood at about eighteen million. These were the figures in round numbers: United States, 4,500,000; Russia, 3,000,000; Poland, 3,500,000; Hungary, 1,000,000; Rumania, 1,000,000; Western Europe, 1,000,000; Germany, 600,000; South America, 350,000; Canada, 180,000; Palestine, 650,000; North Africa, 600,000; or 10,000,000 in Europe; 5,000,000 in the Western Hemisphere; two to three million elsewhere.

Where are all these Jews today? Six million were murdered. There are about five and a half million in the United States; about two and a quarter million in Israel; about three million, anonymous and impotent, in the USSR; about three-quarters of a million in Latin America; 260,000 in Canada; France and Britain have doubled

ABOUT THE BOOK OF JOB, AND THE BOOK OF ISAIAH

By Dr. H. L. Ginsberg, Sabato Morais Professor Of Biblical History And Literature, at The Jewish Theological Seminary Of America, in New York

Current biblical criticism, while adding immeasurably to our understanding of the Bible and its period, can really be characterized as "increasingly conservative," according to Dr. H. L. Ginsberg, Sabato Morais Professor of Biblical History and Literature at The Jewish Theological Seminary of America. Alert to the apparent paradox that growing Conservatism should yield revolutionary new discoveries, Dr. Ginsberg twinkled and smiled as he explained, 'Frequently the application of the best tools of modern research results in heightened respect for the accuracy of the biblical picture of a particular age, and for the validity of a particular biblical lesson."

"Modern scholarship, while aware that the Bible employs legendary as well as historical materials to bring home its lessons, is constantly surprising itself by discovering fresh evidence of the historical reliability of the Bible, and of an authenticity which adds depth and luster to its spiritual teachings.

"Fifty years ago," he said, "scholars tended to assume that any passage which seemed too 'modern' for its ostensible era, was a later addition to the biblical text. They considered this approach 'enlightened' and 'modern'. Today, as new archaeological discoveries help us to date passages, formerly in question, as definitely contemporary, there is marked hesitancy to make such attributions.

Thus we have gradually become convinced that, apart from a few brief, legend-tinged narratives which do not purport to be by Isaiah himself (since they speak of him in the third person), nearly every word in "First Isaiah" actually stems from the famous seer of the eighth century. Again we can now follow and appreciate as never before the argument of the Book of Job, thanks to careful exegesis and philosophical research.

Professor Ginsberg drew examples to support his thesis of biblical authenticity from his own current research, on the Books of Job and Isaiah, which he is presently preparing for publication. The Book of Job, he explained, is part of the wisdom literature of the Bible, as opposed to the covenant literature, of which Isaiah is perhaps the finest example. The classification of biblical texts into these two categories, is very helpful in gaining a better understanding of the books.

The covenant literature, which deals with the agreement established between the Lord and the people of Israel through the mediation of Moses, is likely to be susceptible to external verification, since it deals with the materials of history. The wisdom literature, on the other hand, relates to the universal ethical principles which were assumed to be binding on all individuals.

Antedating by many generations the covenant literature, for which it is a precondition, it lends itself to internal analysis to determine its consistency, its significance to us, and its meaning in the period in which it was recorded. Wisdom literature is addressed mainly to the individual reader, and its precepts are considered valid for people in general, without regard to religious or national loyalty. It is addressed to the people of Israel, and therefore shows a disproportionately small concern both for the individual, and for the salvation and welfare of other individuals.

The Book of Job is the most complete, and the longest study of the problem of retribution to be found in the Bible. Its apparent contradictions disappear according to Professor Ginsberg, if we apply to it modern philology, technique of exegesis, and those other tools of modern scholarship which are applicable to a work of wisdom literature. Here, the test of validity must be internal consistency, rather than external verification.

First, Dr. Ginsberg divides the story of Job into two parts: the legend of the patient Job; and, superimposed upon it, the story of Job the impatient.

Thus Chapters 1 and 2, part of 27 and 28, and the final verses of Chapter 42, deal with the patient Job, but, in the remainder of the book, the roles are reversed. This section begins at the point where Job's fortunes have reached their lowest ebb. Job is now the protestant, and his friends are the champions of Orthodoxy. This much is widely agreed.

According to Professor Ginsberg, however, just this part of the Book of Job is very imperfectly understood. The characters seem to be "talking past" each other, soliloquizing in turn rather than con-

ISRAEL, BEFORE AND AFTER THIRTEEN YEARS

By D. Lou Harris, of Toronto, national chairman, State of Israel Bond Organization of Canada

After thirteen years of Israel Bond activity in Canada, it is opportune to pause and ponder upon the magnificent contribution of Canadian Jewry to the economic development of the State of Israel. However, to assess properly these accomplishments in their true perspective, it is appropriate also to appraise Israel's application of our investment dollars. Only by evaluating these two parallel, but joint developments, may an accurate and just picture be formulated.

Although I have been privileged to visit Israel at fairly frequent intervals, since the creation of the State, on each trip I am struck anew by her phenomenal progress. Year by year, month by month, day by day, the expansion is startling.

The maturity attained by Canadian Jewry since 1953 (when the sale of Israel Bonds started in Canada), has been equalled by the responsible, prompt manner in which Israel has met her financial obligations to us. Our investments are now being repaid, both principal and interest; thus, the cycle has run its course, and we are at last in a position realistically to evaluate the results.

What remains from these thirteen years of struggle and strife? What has resulted from the campaigns and the functions and the canvassing and the cash collections? I can still recall my earlier visits to Israel. If I compare the Israel of those far-off days of 1953 (the first year of the Israel Bond Drive in Canada), with the modern homeland of 1965, I think I may see the real interest that has accrued during these thirteen fateful years.

Of course the urban centres of Tel Aviv, Haifa, and Jerusalem would be almost unrecognizable to a person who had not seen them in over a decade. There has been a tremendous growth of population, a change of face with the erection of vast numbers of homes and apartments, office and factory buildings, and a change of pace in the growing cosmopolitan atmosphere that pervades these cities. Life has become, perhaps, more sophisticated.

But Israel is so much more. It is the farms, where Israel Bonds have enabled agricultural development to provide for almost all the basic food requirements of Israel's growing population. It is the scores of factories and homes in new cities that did not even exist thirteen years ago. This year, I saw cities such as Arad, Ashdod, Carmiel, Dimona, cities which have been literally formed and fashioned with our Israel Bond dollars from the bare dust of the earth in the barren wastelands of the desert. During my latest trip, I was reduced almost to tears as I watched with gratitude and pride the first ship sailing into the new port of Ashdod, built entirely with development dollars, almost one year ahead of schedule.

The greatest change of all has been in the citizens of Israel. Thirteen years ago, I noted a preponderance of European and Russian Jews with a sprinkling of Jews from North America and Moslem countries as well as some orientals. Today, one can see Jews from every corner of the globe, including some from behind the iron curtain. We know that development dollars are enabling Israel to perform this labour of love in providing homes, jobs, schools, hospitals, and other essential services for these immigrants.

But my supreme joy was to observe the children. In only one generation, Israel is bridging the cultural and educational gap of centuries, educating the sabras (native-born Israelis) to grow up into proud, resolute Israelis.

Considering the miracles that have been wrought until now in Israel, because of Israel Bond participation in Canada, the thought of what might be accomplished in the future is almost overwhelming. If so much can be built on the basis of a desolate, poverty-stricken wilderness, we can have no conception of the immense possibilities of the next thirteen years.

On the Eve of the most sacred season of our year, I wish for every Israel Bond leader, volunteer, and purchaser in Canada continued good health and vigour to maintain and even exceed past achievements. If we re-invest our share of financial and emotional principal and interest accrued during these past thirteen years, we may look forward to receiving limitless compound interest in the future.

The best is yet to be!

THE TALK OF THE TOWN

THE RETURN

By Lillian Ross. Reprinted By Permission. Copyright 1965 The New Yorker Magazine, Inc.

On a warm, humid afternoon last week, eight days after Vladimir Horowitz made his triumphant reappearance on the concert stage following a twelve-year lapse, Goddard Lieberson, president of Columbia Records, which is bringing out a two-record album of the concert, went to see the Maestro at his town house, on East Ninety-fourth Street. A butler, who was smiling exuberantly, took Mr. Lieberson upstairs to the living room, facing a garden in the rear, and left him with two poodles – one black, one white – who were chasing each other around the room. It was dark and cool in the room, with lamps unlit, with an air-conditioner humming gently at the base of a large window, with a large circular sofa and easy chairs freshly plumped and protected by summery floral-print slip-covers, with paintings by Manet, Degas, Rouault, and Picasso on the walls, with dozens of vases of fresh flowers placed all around, with a Steinway grand – on which stood a metronome, a framed photograph of Arturo Toscanini (the late father of Mme. Horowitz), and an open book of Schubert sonatas – and with, on either side of a large wood-burning fireplace, conventional rectangular stereo-system speakers. Mr. Lieberson looked appreciatively at the Picasso – a painting of a circus acrobat – and then wandered over to the piano, where he peered at the book of Schubert sonatas. Still standing at the piano, he gave a sigh and quickly played a few bars of a sonata, and then, as Mme. Horowitz entered the room, he took his hands from the piano and embraced her. She was smiling as happily as the butler, and for a moment she and Mr. Lieberson smiled knowingly at each other without saying anything. Then they sat down, Mme. Horowitz on the sofa under the Picasso, and Mr. Lieberson on a chair with his back to the piano.

"So. How's life?" Mr. Lieberson said, apparently making an effort to sound calm.

"Flowers are still coming every day, and more and more flowers," Mme. Horowitz said. "And more telegrams and letters. Between me and Volodya, we had fifteen letters today. One letter, from a manager in South Africa, asking him to play there, offered him a safari through lion country in return."

"Lions!" Mr. Lieberson said.

"But he likes that!" Mme. Horowitz said.

"Except that he won't fly in a jet," Mr. Lieberson said. "He won't fly in a jet, but he flies in a two-engine DC-3 to Maine!" He sighed indulgently.

Mme. Horowitz studied him. "You look much better," she said. "At the concert, when I saw you during intermission, my God, you looked terrible!"

"By the time the concert started, I was so involved with him I had a stomach ache," Mr. Lieberson said. "It was like a prizefight: Not that there was ever a doubt in my mind for one moment that he would play once he said he would play."

"Since he played the concert, he's gained two pounds," Mme. Horowitz said.

As she and Mr. Lieberson sat smiling at each other, the living-room door opened and in strode the Maestro himself, bouncy and ebullient, wearing tortoise-shell-rimmed glasses and decked out in well-creased slacks, a houndstooth sports jacket with a white handkerchief in the breast pocket, and a blue-and-white polka-dot bow tie. He entered laughing, shook hands with and hugged Mr. Lieberson, and sat down on the sofa, putting his legs up and crossing them.

"You look wonderful!" Mr. Lieberson said.

"It agrees with me!" Mr. Horowitz said, laughing again, and the others laughed, too. Mr. Horowitz waved a hand at the air-conditioner. "It's not too cold in here? We have since yesterday a new machine. It is wonderful."

Everybody laughed some more about that. Then Mr. Lieberson mentioned the tremendous applause that had greeted Mr. Horowitz when he first appeared on the stage. "You could have left right then and there," Mr. Lieberson said. "What applause!"

"I should have bowed and gone out," Mr. Horowitz said.

"There was a German, long ago, who actually did that," Mr. Lieberson said.

"Reisenauer," Mr. Horowitz said. "He was drunk."

More laughter. "I was more nervous than you," Mr. Lieberson said.

"Next time, I will be more free from tension," Mr. Horowitz said. "It was sometimes worse when I was making recordings. For invisible people. The printed music is like the law, and I was presenting my case to the studio walls. So I was anxious; I wanted that my words through the piano would get to the people. I had been rehearsing in an empty hall. The afternoon of the concert, when I arrived, I was very nervous, and my hands were very cold. I saw the ushers – the young students who work as the ushers – and I went over to a tall young usher, and I said to him, 'You are a young man; you have warm blood. My fingers are ice cold. Please take my hands in yours and warm them.' So he did, and" – Mr. Horowitz paused and laughed again – "his hands were colder than mine!"

"Everybody was more nervous than you," Mme. Horowitz said. "The way everybody cared. The reviews! The telegrams!"

"I'm like a little baby about the publicity," Mr. Horowitz said. "I never wanted publicity before. I would never let Life take my picture. Now I love it. I want people to know I came back. Yesterday, I took the dogs for a walk, and a strange man comes over to me and he shouts 'Bravo!' and he hits me on the back! And you can't imagine how many people – and the kind of people – sent letters and wires. Clergymen. Judges. These are real. And all the colleagues – Richter, Rubinstein, Stern. A beautiful letter from Stokowski. In a way, that's nice, because some of them are professional enemies. It is very nice. I love it."

"Tell him about the people who stood in line the whole night to get standing room," Mme. Horowitz said. "It was late at night, and we got a telephone call telling us they were standing there. So Volodya said, 'Go down and send them coffee.' So I went down to the drugstore near Carnegie Hall and had them send these young people the coffee."

"They were genuine," Mr. Horowitz said. "That is why, at the end of the concert, I was doing this – pointing and waving to them in the gallery." Mr. Horowitz stood up and waved a pointing finger at an imaginary gallery. Then he sat down again and said to Mr. Lieberson, "And the next time it will be better. You will see."

"That humidity!" Mr. Lieberson said.

"The perspiration was coming here," Mr. Horowitz said, indicating his eyes. "It literally closed my eyes twice. I didn't see the keyboard. When you have that kind of wetness, you have to hit the keys differently, and when the perspiration got into my eyes, I hit some wrong notes. But the recording will come out with everything as it was. A performance is a performance."

"You know what Zero Mostel told you when I brought him to see you backstage," Mr. Lieberson said. "Zero said, 'I'd rather hear you play wet than hear anybody else play dry.' "

"He told me he is in some kind of show on Broadway, and he promised to get me tickets," Mr. Horowitz said. "He promised me." He looked worried, but Mr. Lieberson assured him that Mr. Mostel would get him the tickets, and when Mr. Horowitz smiled again, Mr. Lieberson asked him if he liked the test pressing of the records of the concert. Mr. Horowitz said that the sound level was just right. He stood up and went into a small side room containing a record-player, and put on a test pressing. He put the needle on in the middle of the record, and it slipped, sending a scratching sound over the speaker system in the living room.

"Volodya! You're spoiling the needle!" Mme. Horowitz called out.

Mr. Horowitz let the needle stay where it was, and returned to the sofa as his playing of the Schumann Fantasy in C Major came over the speakers. Mr. Horowitz took off his glasses and moved his fingers in the air along with the playing.

Mr. Lieberson said it sounded beautiful. "I've never seen an audience sit so quiet and spellbound for this piece," he said. "It was flabbergasting. It's such a profound and difficult piece for an audience. It's curiously abstract in its romanticism. It's not like playing the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto at a concert. It's not for the usual public."

"It's against the public," Mr. Horowitz said.

"It's like reading Goethe aloud to an audience," Mr. Lieberson said. "The way you played it."

"It was dedicated to Franz Liszt, but Liszt wrote to Schumann, 'It's What's your stand on Mutual Life's low net cost record?

Mr. McIntosh
I didn't even know they had one!

Interviewer
Let me explain: net cost of a life insurance policy means how much money you get out compared to how much money you put in. Mutual Life policies, in the long run, are out in front.

Mr. McIntosh
Is that so?

Interviewer
Right! And The Mutual Life has maintained this enviable record for some years now.

Mr. McIntosh
How come?

Interviewer
Lots of factors . . . including a consistently high annual dividend.

Mr. McIntosh
Sounds like something I should look into a little more. Where could I . . . ?

GILBERT D. SHORE
Assistant Vice-President

Mr. Gilbert D. Shore and his associates of the Montreal Centre Branch wish to extend Holiday Greetings to their many friends of the Jewish Community.

The Montreal Centre Branch, under the direction of Mr. Gilbert D. Shore, has held the record of the leading Agency of the Empire Life Insurance Company for the past 15 years. It has also been announced by the Life Insurance Management Association of Hartford, Conn., that this branch is listed as one of the largest producing Agencies of all life insurance companies operating in Canada.

In 1964 Mr. Shore and his associates established still another record in life insurance marketing with a 30% increase over the preceding year. In recognition of his outstanding contribution to the Company's progress, Mr. Shore has received a special award from the Chairman of the Board of Directors.

To cope with the phenomenal growth of its Montreal Centre Branch, the Empire Life Insurance Company has leased large additional areas on the 17th floor of the Royal Bank Building in Place Ville Marie, once again.

To those who have assisted us in establishing our record and in maintaining it we extend our sincere appreciation. The ever-increasing number of Jewish policyholders is our pride, and we want to extend a personal message for the New Year, to the Jewish community, and to thank the Jewish community of Montreal and surrounding districts for the privilege of serving their insurance needs, and for helping us to expand at this wonderful rate of growth.

May we suggest you consult our representatives who will give you the best advice available concerning Life Insurance, Group Life Sickness and Accident Insurance and especially Estate Analysis and Business Life Insurance planning.

The helpful Personnel of this Branch is well equipped to render efficient service in all phases of the Life Insurance Business.

PRECAST CONCRETE PANELS...
SETTING THE PACE IN MODERN BUILDING DESIGN

The building for worship stands tall and serene. Those who enter it find peace, hope and spiritual solace.

The home of business stands firmly on its ground. It is practical, sensible as well as aesthetically inviting.

The link between these contrasts is concrete: Only concrete — here in the form of precast panels — can be suited to every conceivable form, need and purpose of construction.

Canada Cement's Technical Sales Staff is always at your service with information, technical data or any other assistance you may require on all types of concrete construction, through any of our sales offices.

When the shofar sounds

In the days of the shepherds on the slopes of Sinai, the ram's horn called the sheep back to the flock. Today as Jews everywhere turn back to a contemplation of the age-old truths first proclaimed by the prophets and then given to the world, we join with them in the greeting that they be "inscribed for a New Year"... a year of health, happiness and prosperity.

THE CHANGING WORLD AND THE JEWISH POSITION IN IT

their populations and each has about 500,000; and there are about another million in other European lands, in Africa, in Australia, scattered in tiny island communities of the Atlantic and Pacific, and totalling in all about thirteen million.

This is the grim result of World War II. Six million dead. Millions scattered throughout the Diaspora. Indeed, there are now Jews in more than 100 lands. This is some change. This was in our minds when the victorious nations of the world, profiting by the sad experience of World War I, foregathered at San Francisco in 1945 to develop a united force to settle the affairs of the world.

In a rare display of unity, Jewish leaders of many lands came together to see that this time the Jewish people should not be forgotten. As the representative of Canadian Jewry, I recall that we aimed at securing a Charter for Human Rights and upholding the dignity of man. And we urged that Palestine should be left as a British Mandate, hoping that because of the Balfour Declaration we could eventually establish a Jewish State.

That we were successful is now history for on May 14, 1948, the Jewish State was established. Now we begin to realize how great was the third of our three prime responsibilities, that we pledged ourselves to carry out at the beginning of the war, that is taking care of the living casualties of the struggle.

The Joint Distribution Committee work increased tremendously. Refugee aid societies were formed everywhere, for the Jews were all over the highways and byways of Europe. The concentration camps were being moved from the enemy places to the friendly atmosphere of France and Italy, where their inmates were seeking a place to go and hopefully waiting for the State whose doors would be open to them.

And the State was established. Large sums of money were raised amongst all the free Jewries, but mainly in the United States and Canada, to sustain the remnants of Jewry left in Europe and to move them gradually to the State of Israel.

For the first time since the second destruction of the Temple two important Jewish worlds exist, and sometimes it seems to me that God in His infinite wisdom created the cure for the Jewish people even before the disease itself all but crippled or destroyed Eastern and Western European Jewry. The Jews of the Diaspora (dispersion) have established themselves as strong citizens of their respective countries and have, by and large, prospered and they must provide the funds to establish Jews in the other Jewish world, Israel.

Over the years, tremendous sums have been raised by loans and credits from governments and direct gift dollars from Jewish communities, and through the successful sale of Israel Bonds.

The responsibilities on both sides of the Jewish world are so great that we must devise a plan on how to cope with them. Unfortunately, in the past, the Jewish people left many things to chance, but now we must plan for the future, even as the great nations of the world are planning. There is no guarantee, that, left to chance or wishful thinking, either Diaspora Jewry or Israeli Jewry might not retrogress. Diaspora Jewry is of the utmost concern to Israeli Jewry.

Our obligations as Diaspora Jews are very serious:

1. We must recognize the fact that good Jews are good citizens, and that Jewish citizens in the United States are Americans of the Jewish faith; and likewise Canadian Jewish citizens are Canadians of the Jewish faith; and similarly in Britain, France, and other countries. We respond as citizens to all of the citizen's obligations, but we consciously want to maintain a strong and vibrant Jewish life.
2. We have further the obligation of assisting Israel in receiving the displaced and homeless Jews.
3. We have obligations for the relief of Jewry wherever they are displaced and exist hopeless and forlorn. The Joint Distribution Committee has just commemorated fifty years of activity. Little did anyone realize that in 1965 we would still require an agent to help us discharge the responsibility to a large segment of Jews in other lands.

At this point, I would like to bring before you something of the operations, past, present, and future of the World Jewish Congress. This is the one unifying instrument that we have. It was the World Jewish Congress that sounded the alarm when it warned of Hitler's plans to exterminate Jewry, and of his secret re-arming.

That is history, a page of horror history and we can't change it. But, we can learn our lesson, and should the World Jewish Congress ever sound an alarm, then I hope that Jews at least will stop, listen, and act in their own interest. The time to plan is now, today.

It was the World Jewish Congress Institute of Jewish Affairs that documented the crimes of the Nazis. It revealed the vastness of the tragedy. With the war over, the World Jewish Congress set about its tasks. It lent its weight to the establishment of the State of Israel. It helped draft the United Nations Declaration of Human Rights, and offered recommendations on the Genocide Convention. It brought into its fold, and helps to advise and guide, Jewish communities in sixty-four lands.

We have good reason, beyond humanitarian, in protecting and advising Jewish communities in many lands because we must try to prevent any incident that, as a result of publication, might inflame others to follow suit.

To the wonderment of the world, the World Jewish Congress convinced the Government of West Germany to embark on a program of compensation and restitution to survivors of Nazism which, when completed, will have paid out about ten billion dollars.

Dr. Nahum Goldmann, the President of the World Jewish Congress, has advised me that the German Government is proposing a new law which will take in the post-'53 and other categories of claimants, and which will cost the Germans an additional one billion dollars. We are fighting for some improvements which would cost another 250 million dollars, and we are hopeful that we will reach a final agreement.

Even with all the reparations, we cannot forget the monstrous Nazi onslaught against the Jews.

Nuremberg took care of the Nazi bigwigs, or most of them. But a mass of lower-echelon Nazis went underground or into hiding. The West German Government set up a central investigation bureau and they began to get reports about Nazis who had never faced justice. The difficulty was they did not have witnesses to give evidence, to come forward and confront the camp commanders, the murderers, the beasts who had butchered six million Jews.

The German Government turned to us in New York, at the World Jewish Congress Institute of Jewish Affairs, and asked us to find witnesses for hundreds of trials of Nazis. We did. Through our affiliates all over the world, through our offices, we scoured the communities and we produced more than a thousand witnesses. These investigations of the World Jewish Congress led to the indictment of many Nazis who would otherwise have gone scot-free.

The position of the Federal German authorities in connection with the Statute of Limitations on war crimes is now well known. The Statute was to come up in March before the German Parliament. In the meantime, the Parliament decided to set up an office to survey all the material concerning war criminals which had not yet been checked. I was sure that this office would find out that there is so much general material in Poland, Russia, Israel, and America, that it would be impossible to sift it in the two months till May, when the Statute of Limitations would come to an end. Based on this report, there was a proposal to prolong the Statute of Limitations for murder and it has gone into effect.

There are other issues of great concern to the World Jewish Congress:

The position of Soviet Jewry is one of them and we will not rest until the Jews there have the same facilities as others in Russia.

We are very concerned about anti-Semitism in all its forms, and the World Jewish Congress took the initiative in relations to the Ecumenical Council as far back as February, 1962, when we prepared the original document that was submitted to the Vatican Council in what turned out to be a successful effort to achieve a Declaration on anti-Semitism. We hope that the draft schema on anti-Semitism will be finally accepted at the next session of the Council.

This is a changing world and we have to realize that:

1. There are two Jewish worlds, one, the State; the other, the Diaspora.
2. The Diaspora will always be with us and we must vouchsafe a good life for the present and future generations.
3. The Diaspora is as necessary to the well-being of Israel as Israel is to the spiritual and moral welfare of Jews elsewhere.
4. These two simultaneous freedoms, as they have been called, must be carefully nurtured if a continuing Jewish life is to persist.
5. We can never think in terms of what is but rather as a continuing effort to meet the challenges of environment, of changing values, of world revolution in thought.
6. In this context we must accept the proposition that Jews must live in sameness and difference simultaneously. We no longer inherit the intellectual and cultural baggage of hundreds and thousands of European Jews which characterized our society from 1880 to 1938. Now we take our nourishment mostly from the economic, social, and educational opportunities of our respective societies.

The Jews of Israel have worked wonders. They have taken in more than 1,500,000 refugees from all over the world. They have made the desert bloom, they have indeed made it a land of milk and honey. Israeli industry and agriculture are surging forward. Their proud flag is on a score of ships, and on modern planes. They have brought us pride and joy. They have added lustre to the Jew, be he in Israel or the Diaspora.

Jews in the Diaspora must remain strong, living in peace and in friendship with their fellow citizens, taking part to the fullest extent in the life of their respective lands. They must continue to lend a helping hand to the people of Israel, so long as it is needed. If they are weak in the lands of Dispersion, this support will be impossible, and then Israel will suffer.

To maintain our strength, to achieve greater unity, we have to settle down to serious planning. Now is the time for us to mold a code of conduct for world Jewish affairs. The lethargy, the do-nothing - until - there's - a - crisis attitude must end. The overlapping, the confusion of over-organized Jewry must end.

I offer the World Jewish Congress as the platform, as the forum within which all responsible and dedicated leadership can meet together and chart a course that will keep us strong in the Diaspora; able to maintain our great Jewish heritage; simultaneously able to keep splendid the glories of Israel reborn. We must remember the glories, profit by our mistakes, and recognize the imperatives for what they are.

There is a challenge facing us. Let us not be found wanting.

The United States of America has rightfully assumed a role of leadership in world affairs. American Jewry, with its great human, cultural, and spiritual resources must likewise take its place as a leader of world Jewry. We hope we shall have its help in safeguarding the rights of Jews and upholding the dignity of the Jewish people.

JOEL MAZER, PRESIDENT OF AVON JEWELLERY LIMITED

"Sure... I bought Belleville"

And not only because I like it here, although that's a big factor. I bought Belleville because it's near the two major markets, and has really good rail facilities.

Just as important is the excellent, stable labour force. I have no trouble hiring good, loyal employees. I'm in good company too! Did you know there are 25 industries located in Belleville? And as I said, I like it here. There's a friendly atmosphere, and lots of good facilities for weekend leisure. Where else would I want to live?

These and a host of other reasons why Belleville can offer more economies to you as an industrial location, are contained in detailed information available from: Belleville Industrial Commission, City Hall, Belleville, Ontario.

We'll welcome your enquiries.

one of the greatest, but I will not play it for the public, because it is so difficult to digest.'"

"So you had to choose it," Mme. Horowitz said.

"Even Scriabin is easier," Mr. Horowitz said, with satisfaction. "You know," he added to Mr. Lieberson, "I played for Scriabin in Kiev, before one of his concerts, when I was a boy of ten. Just three months before he died, at the age of forty-three. My uncle, the brother of my papa, was an accomplished pianist and musicologist, a music critic, and the greatest friend of Scriabin, so when he told Scriabin he had a very talented nephew, Scriabin probably hated to do it, to listen to me play, just before his own concert! But he probably said to himself, 'I have to do it.' So my parents took me, and I played some Chopin, some Paderewski, some other things, and he told my parents, 'Don't make of him a sectarian pianist; make him a cultured musician.'" Mr. Horowitz put his glasses on, rose quickly, and went into the side room as the bravos and applause came over the speakers in stereo. He changed the record.

As Mr. Horowitz, on the record, played the first encore — Debussy's "Doll's Serenade" — Mr. Lieberson said that it had come out sounding good. "Debussy was making fun of Wagner," he said.

"Tongue in the cheek," Mr. Horowitz said.

"Wonderful!" Mr. Lieberson said.

"If I played it in the studio, I would never do it like this," Mr. Horowitz said. "In the studio, it is a dry studio, and that's what you are hearing. In a performance, everything should be warmer. In a concert, the artist takes chances. In a studio, he is just sitting there. With real people listening to you, it is a show. It is emotional and aesthetic, but it is still a show. It is the brilliant lawyer presenting the case. I do my best you should get it. Listen to this!"

The record was playing Moszkowski's Etude in A Flat Major, and Mr. Horowitz laughed as he ran his fingers rapidly along in the air to the music.

"That's marvellous," Mr. Lieberson said.

"It is the postcard, this record," Mr. Horowitz said. "It is what you send after you visit a beautiful canyon, and you decide to send a postcard of the panorama you have seen. When I play, I listen to myself, and I hear it much better than I hear it on the record."

"Nobody else hears it the way you do," Mr. Lieberson said. "It's always unique for the pianist."

On the record, Mr. Horowitz was playing the last of his encores — Schumann's "Träumerei." The Maestro cocked his head to one side, listening. Smiling at Mr. Lieberson, he said, "I chose 'Träumerei' to play because I wanted to finish the concert like a dream — it never really happened; it's not true. But after it was all over, when we were driving back from the concert, we asked the driver to let us out at Eighty-sixth Street, on Fifth Avenue, and we went to sit on a bench in the Park. Then we walked the rest of the way home and there, in front of our house, we found five young people waiting. I loved it. For twelve years, I was living just a normal life, not being recognized. Then I saw these young people, and I said to myself, 'I really did play my concert. It really happened.'"

ABOUT THE BOOK OF JOB

versing, not answering each other's arguments and sometimes even seeming to say the same things as their opponents when they are supposed to be refuting them.

Ultimately our understanding of those parts of the Book of Job which Dr. Ginsberg has described as Job the Impatient depends largely on ascribing each verse to the correct speaker, and on discovering, from careful scrutiny of the text itself, the tenor, force, and structure of each argument.

This ascription and analysis has been Professor Ginsberg's contribution to our understanding of this important biblical book.

"And to think," says Professor Ginsberg, "that Tur-Sinai pointed out all of 45 years ago that the Eliphaz of Job 15, and its author, cease to sound like addle-pates the moment one places a colon after verse 13 and encloses vss. 14-16 in quotation marks! Not Eliphaz himself purports to know about God's fastidiousness something that he can only have learned from one of the beings in God's entourage, but, as we should have expected from Eliphaz's opening remarks, Job. And again not Eliphaz infers therefrom that God surely judges no mortal favorably but again, as we should have expected from chapter 14, Job."

Thus Professor Ginsberg has reinterpreted and retranslated the Book of Job the Impatient and discovered that, contrary to the prevalent opinion, it is as coherent, and as astonishingly sophisticated in its literary artistry, as it is profound.

In the Book of Isaiah, the problems of the scholar are somewhat different.

As part of the covenant literature, the book abounds in references to historical or quasi-historical events. At one point, scholars enamored of an approach which they believed to be inspired by the evolutionary concepts of Darwin, attempted to fractionalize the Book of the First Isaiah, claiming that the most universalistic of his prophecies could not have been written in the eighth century, but must be the work of a later hand.

Dr. Ginsberg has meticulously equated recent archaeological finds with events described in the text. To this analysis, he had added the same careful internal study which helped him to interpret Job. And his answer: "We have gradually become convinced that, apart from a few, brief, legend-tinged narratives which do not purport to be by Isaiah himself (since they speak of him in the third person), nearly every word in 'First Isaiah' actually stems from the famous seer of the eighth century."

There is, for example, the king referred to in Isaiah 14:4b-21, the ode on the death of a tyrant. In the text, the tyrant is identified as "the king of Babylon", a description that was somewhat confusing until scholars realized that the king referred to is Sargon of Assyria, one of whose titles, and one of which he was particularly proud, was "King of Babylon."

"Besides," says Dr. Ginsberg, "the poem is full of words and phrases characteristic of Isaiah, some of them in fact found only in Isaiah, and the outlook is pure Isaiah. Who else would have stressed that the tyrant's fate was earned by his cruelty to 'cities,' 'nations,' 'the world,' 'the earth', never a solitary, specific mention of 'Judah' or 'Israel' or 'Jerusalem' or 'Zion'? And who else would again have noted that it was an occasion for joy and an augury for a happier future for 'cities,' 'nations,' 'the world,' 'the earth', never a solitary, specific mention of 'Judah' or 'Israel' or 'Jerusalem' or 'Zion'?

It is by meticulous study of texts that Dr. Ginsberg has been led to his conclusions on the authenticity of the Isaian text. Interestingly enough, as if to refute those early scholars who believed that the book was too universal for its reputed time, it is in one of the most universalistic portions that Dr. Ginsberg has identified one of the most specific contemporary references.

There is, in the book of Isaiah, a time-bound variant of the Isaian vision, and the time it is bound to is the time of Isaiah. The second half of Chapter 19 first describes the process by which Egypt will be converted to the worship of the Lord. Then, at the end, we read (19:23-24):

> In that day there shall be a highway from Egypt to Assyria, so that the Assyrians shall join the Egyptians and the Egyptians the Assyrians, and the Egyptians shall worship together with the Assyrians. In that day Israel shall be third to Egypt and Assyria as a household word for blessedness throughout the world; for the Lord of Hosts will have blessed them, saying, "Blessed by my people Egypt, my handiwork Assyria, and my very own Israel."

"Imagine, the Israelite prophet has the Lord say 'my people Egypt' and has him bless Assyria! He even thinks nothing of saying, 'Israel shall be third to Egypt and Assyria!' But why does he pick just Egypt and Assyria, and go out of his way to stress the construction of a highway from Assyria to Egypt and intensified intercourse between these two peoples? These details of the future age were suggested to him by something that was happening under his very eyes, so to speak.

Just in his time trade relations were established between the two countries; traffic along the existing road from Assyria to Egypt, whose southern end passed through Philistia, only some fifteen miles to the west of Judah's border, became heavier. For, in a fragment of a prism inscription which was only published in 1954, Sargon, whose empire extended to the frontier of Egypt, tells us how he played Commodore Perry to Egypt's Japan. Says he: 'I opened the sealed port of Egypt, and I mixed the people of Assyria and Egypt together and made them trade with each other.'"

Some additional evidence of the importance of this route in the days of Sargon (and Isaiah) turned up in Ashdod, during the archaeological excavations carried out there in the summer of 1963, in the shape of fragments of a stela bearing cuneiform (i.e. Assyrian) writing: script, spelling, and phraseology are familiar from other inscriptions of Sargon.

"The foregoing," concluded Dr. Ginsberg, "are not by any means the only passages in Isaiah that come to life in the bright light of history. But I have selected these examples because the prophecies in question are not merely of historical interest but are living messages to our own age."

Weizmann. A personal meeting with him I regarded as a high privilege. During our talk Dr. Weizmann asked for my support of the work at Rehovoth.

These were early days for me. I was then much taken up physically and financially with the work of the Central British Fund for German Jewry, which had been set up for the relief of our Jewish brethren in Germany after the advent of Hitler. I asked Dr. Weizmann what he had in mind. He replied that if I gave him a contribution of £500 Sterling, then about $2,500, he would be more than delighted. This modest request was typical of Chaim Weizmann.

Immediately after the Second World War, when all of us in England had hoped for a bit of tranquillity, the serenity of our home was suddenly disrupted by the arrival of our dear friend Meyer. I discovered almost immediately that his concept of what was a not ungenerous donation was quite different from that of his teacher, Chaim Weizmann. Although, as you know, he is a very modest man, his ideas were far from modest. His first request of me was for £100,000, which at that time was $400,000. Before I could recover my breath I found myself agreeing to let him have that amount for the Weizmann Institute. (One thing I must add, Meyer did not learn from Dr. Weizmann to "make molehills out of mountains".)

Looking back now, I cannot help wondering whether the contribution was "not ungenerous" even by Meyer's exacting standards. Since then, of course, with punctilious regularity, he has put his demands at higher and higher levels. But the nature of his cause being what it is, I can find no reason to quarrel with him as his modesty continues to mount the scale like a mezzo-soprano trying to reach the highest note.

The contract today with those early days is all the greater when we realize that the annual budget of the Weizmann Institute for upkeep alone is gradually, perhaps not so gradually, nearing the ten million mark. I mean dollars, not sterling. (You can breathe a bit more freely now.) Some difference from the days when $2,500 was considered a generous contribution.

We are frequently told of the responsibilities attached to the possession of wealth. In fact, the real problem is how to dispose of possessions, how to translate them into meaningful terms for human welfare, how to help fashion a better world with one's influence and material resources. I remember once reading that: "Philanthropy is the art of turning benefactions to the greater good of the greatest number."

Nowadays, philanthropy has become more than an art: It is a science, not an exact science, perhaps, but nonetheless a science of giving. For the vast need to improve the human condition, the quest for world peace is responsible for these new concepts of philanthropy. It has been my aim to foster a new attitude of mind among those fortunate enough to be able to help their fellow-men who are engaged in the processes of scientific inquiry. This attitude, I call philanthropy for science.

Ever since the Torah was given to the Jewish People, dedication and generosity to our sages and learned men have been our proud heritage. Whatever you may call it, science, learning, knowledge, Torah, at all times scholarship and learning commanded our reverence and respect. In our Prayer Book, in the Ethics of the Fathers, the Pirkei Avos, we are taught that our house should be a meeting place for the wise. In the wider sense I take this to mean that not only should our doors be open to scholars but that our influence and wealth should be devoted to enable them to pursue their scholarship.

The reverence for knowledge, the passion for learning, the delight in wisdom, the unending search for truth, and peace, have always been the driving forces of the collective Jewish intellect. I would like to pose a few questions:

Have we, the Jewish People of the Diaspora, really made our house a meeting place for the wise?

Have we Jews fully exercised our influence and our wealth to help Jewish intellect to flower at home and in Israel?

In all honesty, I think our efforts can be infinitely increased. The satisfaction to be gained from seeing the fruits of such efforts will be ample return for our investment. Not only in Israel but in the lands in which we live.

We are privileged to witness the State of Israel regaining for our people that aristocracy of the mind which flourished in the golden days of our history, in Palestine, Babylon, the Middle East, and Spain, and, alas, in the destroyed Jewish life in Eastern and Central Europe.

The Weizmann Institute today occupies a position of eminence in science and learning even more vital than our revered Dr. Weizmann himself could ever have imagined. For this we are deeply indebted to Meyer's powerful imagination and enterprise and, of course, the remarkable aggregation of hundreds of scientists from Israel, and the rest of the world working at Rehovoth.

Indeed, I might ask, would people be as excited about the State of Israel were it not for such institutions as the Weizmann Institute?

My friends, I visualize an even wider scope for the Weizmann Institute with its ever expanding scientific program available for the benefit of Israel, for the benefit of its neighbors and of humanity as a whole. That is what the Institute offers as its contribution to a true and lasting peace. In the words of Isaiah: "They shall beat their swords into plough-shares and their spears into pruning hooks. Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

It is my firm belief that peace can be achieved through scientific collaboration. It is to that end that greater pooling of financial and material resources must be directed.

Our gathering here is, in a wider sense, not only a tribute to Meyer upon reaching three-score-years-and-ten but also, if I may say so, a vindication of the often unorthodox methods which he has followed in building that splendid institution which has gained world renown, the Weizmann Institute of Science.

When I was thinking of how best the friends of the Weizmann Institute of Science and of Meyer Weisgal could celebrate and remember his seventieth birthday, an idea occurred to me. To my personal knowledge, Meyer has had to weather many storms and crises over the past twenty years since the original group to set up the Weizmann Institute was formed. It is therefore appropriate to suggest an unorthodox plan as our tribute to a great and unorthodox man.

I have previously mentioned that I am firmly committed to philanthropy for science. This evening I place before you a novel proposal.

It is to establish a Meyer Weisgal Scientific Education Trust. With an initial fund of $7 million, or $100,000 for every year of Meyer's life until he reaches 120, together with his beautiful wife, Shirley. (Let me say in passing that I regard Shirley as the greatest asset of the Institute. The warmth and loveliness of her personality, her endurance to put up with Meyer's "meshugasin", (vagaries) should be a model for all good wives. Her home in Rehovoth, always wide open, has become in the real sense of the word a gathering place for the wise and the generous. Shirley deals with the wise, Meyer takes care of the generous.)

The Weisgal Scientific Education Trust, as I envisage it, will be established by a group of private and family foundations and individuals, through a pooling of their resources. The funds thus made available would be used to enable an increasing number of Israel youth to take post-graduate studies at the Weizmann Institute and make available fellowships for students from abroad.

This Trust, thanks to the cooperation of our American friends, has already come into being. I am proud to be able to tell you that I shall be happy to serve as its international chairman. Before November, 1965, we shall have raised the initial fund of $7 million. (Parenthetically, a good friend of mine here from England, when he heard of the project, told me that he wants to contribute $1 million to this fund.)

Apart from its intrinsic merit such a Meyer Weisgal Scientific Education Trust would have for the coming generation in Israel and the reservoir of scientific manpower it would create, we as Jews will be proud of the fact that as a nation we have brought into the world a system of scientific education for peaceful purposes.

For let us remember: The Land of Israel was once the birthplace of the Jewish intellect. It can be made to flourish again as the centre of Jewish intellectual endeavour in all spheres of human endeavor, the arts, the sciences and, above all, Torah Lishmo, "learning for its own sake."

Therefore, my friends, we must pool our material resources to foster intellect and knowledge in the land of our forefathers. Then truly we can say that we have opened our homes to the wise.

"Remember unto me, O my God," said Nehemiah, "for good, all that I have done for this People."

IN DEFENSE OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

forfeiting one's life will — any more than the danger of going to jail or being heavily fined — be an absolute deterrent to unlawful activity). Human beings, in every country and in every age, have been known to place themselves in peril of their lives for the sake of booty, and this, be it added, has been done in pursuit of lawful as well as unlawful occupations. If fear of the executioner were sufficient to govern the conduct and activities of every individual, an end to all killing by one human being of another could well be anticipated. But, by the same token, this selfsame dread of an untimely end would also inhibit all stunt fliers, all mountain climbers, all automobile racers, all trapeze artists, all policemen, all firemen, and all soldiers. Obviously, human nature being so variegated, the fear of death, whether at the hands of justice or in some other fashion, refuses to operate on a uniform pattern. None the less, the asseverations of numerous and respected reformers that the death penalty is of no deterrent value whatsoever does not merit acceptance. These men, who profess to be so certain that the spectre of the gallows necessarily plays no part in any deliberation involving the commission of a heinous act, are in effect proclaiming that they have been vouchsafed an insight into the thought processes of every killer and would-be killer.

The argument that perpetual imprisonment is a more effective panacea for anti-social intentions than the sentence of death is known to have been made long ago by Julius Caesar before the Roman Senate while it was sitting in judgment of a trouble-maker named Catilina. Undoubtedly, the fear of a lengthy imprisonment can be said to carry weight. Prisoners, before trial, have been heard to talk theatrically about preferring death to a permanent confinement. None the less, few "lifers" have ever been known to commit suicide. Hardly a day passes in which we do not read in our newspapers about lawyers for the defence resorting to every conceivable manoeuvre both before and after the trial in an effort to save their clients from the gallows. Nor does the condemned man fail to be greatly relieved when told that his sentence has been changed to one of lifetime detention. It is impossible to avoid the conclusion that the forfeit most of all dreaded by careerists in crime is the one that offers the greatest possible discouragement to those who might be inclined to follow in their footsteps. But altogether aside from its admonitory function, the supreme penalty has yet another merit to recommend it. The mere incarceration of a murderer offers no more than a partial security to the society from which he is ostensibly removed. Even if he should fail to escape or otherwise regain his freedom, he can remain a threat to the other inmates of the prison, to say nothing of its officials and employees. It is unnecessary to demonstrate, on the other hand, that a dangerous killer will forever remain innocuous once he has been executed.

What moral issues are involved in the judicial taking of human life, as distinguished from the practical and expedient? Sooner or later, the opponents of capital punishment fall back upon the thesis that the state is altogether without moral right to assume a prerogative that is God's alone. Admittedly, the deliberate and ceremonial taking of the life of a human being is offensive to humane persons, and this is the reason why executions, when they do take place, are no longer performed in public. Nor, should it be added, is the populace encouraged to oversee the daily holocausts inside our abattoirs and slaughterhouses. However, that which is aesthetically repugnant to our senses might on occasion have to be endured. A society already well inured to tales of violence and bloodshed, both real and fictitious, could be reasonably expected to accept with some composure an occasional and well-deserved execution.

It is generally agreed that it would be wrong for the state to inflict torture, or any hideous punishment, no matter how callous the offence. No less reprehensible is the infliction of death for such offences as theft, embezzlement, smuggling, bribery, counterfeiting, or seditious utterances, as happens all too often behind the Iron Curtain and elsewhere. Yet in protest against such inhumanity, we should not unthinkingly jump to the opposite extreme and propound it is a categorical negative that no crime however dastardly, is deserving of the death penalty.

At the present time, the doctrine of absolute non-resistance forms no significant part of the thinking of the Western world. Hence, the right of an individual to take the life of another in defence of his person, or even of his property, is hardly contested, even by the most advanced ideologists. Let us imagine a situation, hypothetical and yet not improbable, in which you find yourself threatened by a gunman. You happen to carry a loaded weapon, and drawing in self-defence, kill the marauder. Obviously, no charge will be laid against you, once the facts have been ascertained. You will also meet with the congratulations of many of your high-minded acquaintances, even though you have just taken the life of a human being.

Now, altering the illustration somewhat, let us imagine a less fortunate outcome of the encounter. Your assailant is quicker with his gun and you are the victim. The courts, in all likelihood, would call it murder; but according to the ethic of those who are opposed to capital punishment such is the sanctity of human life that the killer's right to go on living in this world is not be be denied him. Unfortunately for them, these doctrinaires must contend with a contradiction or two. To begin with, why is it proper on occasion for a private citizen to take the life of another, while the state may do so under no circumstances whatsoever? Again, if it is allowable to deprive a would-be murderer of his life, in order to forestall a crime, why does it become morally reprehensible to do so after the crime has been committed?

It will be argued, no doubt, that an act of murder, once having been committed, is irreversible. And since nothing could be done to restore the victim to life, hanging the murderer becomes no more than a wanton act of vengeance. In passing, it could be remarked that the renunciation of vengeance is a virtue far more easily exercised by the dispassionate onlooker of a crime than by the sorrowing relatives who are directly afflicted. But further, could not the alleged incompatibility between vengeance, which is stigmatized as altogether bad, and justice, which is always reputed as good, lead us into some rather subtle hair-splitting? The only recognizable moral test of any act of retribution — call it vengeance, revenge, retaliation, justice, or what you will — is whether it is commensurate with the wrong suffered or whether it is excessive under the circumstances. If a man has insulted your wife, you might either shoot him or merely knock him down. Your action in either case constitutes an act of vengeance; but morally there is obviously a vast difference.

The supposed contradiction between punitive measures and rehabilitation is similarly open to question. Allowing for the consideration that the protection of society and the safety of innocent persons are, or at least should be, the predominant incentives, it can be asserted that nearly always the imposition of a penalty by a court does carry with it some hope that reform or correction of behaviour will ultimately result. As often as not, adequate punishment can be the only road leading to an abandonment of the criminal mode of life. It is a fallacy to assume that a mild sentence is necessarily more "educational" than one that is severe. A stiff sentence could be highly salutary and result in new respect for authority, while in the minds of the culprit and his friends ill-advised clemency all too frequently arouses not contrition but contempt.

It is frequently argued that a man who has been hanged for murder might on later verification be proved guiltless. It is an historical fact that in every country and in every age countless persons have been harried to their doom through the machinations of private enemies as well as by hatreds begotten of religion and politics. In 1916, Tom Mooney was tried in San Francisco on the charge of having hurled a bomb that killed ten persons taking part in a Preparedness Day parade. He was condemned to death on the strength of fabricated testimony introduced with the connivance of the district attorney; but he was saved from the gallows as a result of an investigation carried out by the editor of a San Francisco newspaper. Occasional repetitions of such scandals cannot be entirely ruled out for the future; but they are likely to be counteracted by an aroused public opinion and a vigilant press. Moreover, the revised criminal procedure now almost everywhere in force does provide almost ironclad guarantees to an accused person. He is safeguarded by stringent laws of evidence, and he is seldom lacking in experienced counsel. Invariably, a verdict of murder is subject to minute scrutiny through a series of appeals and reviews.

It is true that a vast number of prosecutions do leave behind them a strong element of doubt. Indeed, a trial is meant by its very nature to distinguish between that which is certain and that which remains unconvincing. In by far the greater number of acquittals, the accused is discharged, not after being certified innocent and harmless, but only because the charge against him has not been proved beyond all reasonable doubt. Be it remembered that in cases where any doubt remains it is always the accused who is entitled to benefit. But it must also be acknowledged that not all court proceedings necessarily leave in their wake a residue of doubt. Often the charge against the accused is easily substantiated, the testimony of the prosecution's witnesses fully corroborated, and all contradictory evidence conspicuous by its total absence. To convert into a universal principle the legitimate lack of assurance that is the necessary consequence of many a court proceeding would soon reduce to chaos the entire administration of justice.

It should be pointed out also that there is not a single human enterprise or field of activity which is not marred by some regrettable episodes. Yet we do not prohibit the erection of tall buildings or bridges, or the digging of subways, merely because invariably some two or three persons lose their lives in the course of each operation. Acts of justice, designed as effectively as possible to protect the innocent will unquestionably be accompanied, now and again, by tragic blunders. But unless such miscarriages become blatant and of alarming extent, there is nothing to be done except to minimize them as far as is humanly possible. In any event, such errors, tragic though they must be, could at their worst be insignificant as compared with opposite blunders in which further loss of innocent lives could be the direct consequence of thoughtless clemency extended to dangerous and unrepentant assassins.

Be it noted, in conclusion, that this doctrine of the sanctity of human life was enunciated a very long time ago, though not to the point of absurdity, when it was written "Whoso sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed, for in the image of God made he man" (Genesis 9:6). If we are to discourse in terms of what is morally right or wrong, could it not be asserted that it is the paramount duty of a state, undeterred by obfuscations about "rights", "vengeance", "eye-for-an-eye", and similar clichés, to offer its citizens the maximum protection, in the light of all known experience, from killers, both sane and insane, both actual and potential?

KIBBUTZ LIFE IN ISRAEL:

concluded that the family does not exist in the kibbutz.

On the other hand, though the family does not exist as in our own family sense, it does exist in a psychological sense. Although parents and children do not share a common residence, they are deeply attached to each other and comprise a distinct and recognizable social group. Moreover, the members of the kibbutz themselves refer to this group as a family.

In summary the specific objectives of this system of collective life were:

(1) to abolish parental authority, particularly the patriarchal authority of the father;
(2) to free the female from the impediment of being assigned only a few special roles in society, such as homemaking and child rearing;
(3) to perpetuate the value system of the communal society; and
(4) to provide the children with the most democratic education possible.

It was hoped that freeing the parents of the need to care for and educate their children would bring the parent-child relation to rest mainly on positive emotions. Since, also, the community as a whole would be responsible for his physical well-being, the child would not be beholden to any particular person, and least of all to his parents.

Asked to rank in importance the values they wished their educational system to instill in their children, the parents of one kibbutz replied:

First and foremost, "work"; after that, in the order of importance: "love of humanity;" "responsibility to the kibbutz;" "good character;" "intellectualism;" "socialism;" "Zionism;" "social participation;" "patriotism;" and "cooperation." Neither emotional adjustment nor success in competition was mentioned: while personal advancement was contrary to all their values in general, since by work they meant cooperative work in the kibbutz. Thus, queried also as to which ambitions they hoped their children would realize, kibbutz members ranked being a good comrade first, and being a good worker second.

Let's examine the lives of children in this unique environment. The children are raised in children's houses. When the mother comes home from the hospital, the child is tended in an Infants' House, which is quite well equipped for the care of the newborn. The mother has the first six weeks for herself. She does no work other than that of feeding and caring for her baby. Thereafter, for as long as she nurses the child, she works four hours a day, and then she is with her child before work, after work, Saturdays, holidays, and any other time she has.

In the meantime, the infant is cared for by nurses trained for the job. When the child is about eighteen months old, he leaves the Infants' House with four or five of his own age group. This group forms a group called Kvutza, under the tutelage of another type of nurse. The child lives with this group until he is three or four, at which time he usually becomes a member of a so-called "mixed kindergarten."

A mixed kindergarten is composed of about twenty children whose ages range from three to seven, and when the child is graduated from the kindergarten, his education has included first-grade studies. The theory behind this type of arrangement is that the older children gradually learn responsibility toward the younger children and function as "senior counsellors." After kindergarten, the former infant enters the second grade, and gets eleven more years of schooling. Thus, at age eighteen, he has acquired the equivalent of a high-school education and has become a full-fledged member of the kibbutz.

During this whole period, he sleeps in houses that are built specifically for him, with children of his own age. His parents' living quarters are situated from fifty to two hundred yards away from him. At night, two women circulate among the various children's houses from 10:00 p.m. to 6:00 a.m., see to it that the children are covered warmly and that they are not crying. In emergencies, they call a parent or doctor.

Let's observe a typical day in the life of Kibbutz children:

The children all rise in the morning at the same time and have a free play period before breakfast. After breakfast, there is usually an organized group activity supervised by the nursery teacher or the nurse, its nature depending upon the age of the children. These activities are diverse, including games, art, drawing, dancing, singing, and sculpting, listening to stories told or read by the nursery teacher, hikes into the fields, or tours through the animal barns.

The morning is broken up by a mid-morning snack, after which there is either a free play period or a continuation of the organized activity. After lunch all the children must nap or rest for approximately two hours. When they waken from their naps they change into their "good clothes," are given a snack, and spend the rest of the afternoon in either free or organized play. As in the case of the other two meals, supper is a communal meal, and after supper the parents arrive to take their children to their rooms.

Children spend approximately two hours with their parents, who accompany them to their dormitories when it is time to return. Before going to bed the children almost invariably receive a shower, in addition to showers they may receive during the day, after which they are tucked into bed by their nurse, who usually tells them a story or sings a song before turning out the lights. The children are then left alone until the following morning, except for a periodic check during the night by the night watchman of the children's dormitories.

It should be pointed out that boys and girls experience few differences based on sex in their daily routine of living. They sleep in the same room, and use the same showers and toilets. Moreover few, if any, differences are to be discerned in their games.

From the earliest age on, the children learn to interact with little or no adult supervision. If a child is afraid at night, or becomes ill, his companions take care of him: play with him, talk to him, bring him water, and in general reassure him. Having intimately shared his experiences, they know what he is likely to be afraid of; and the anxious child, trusting his comrades, will confide in them.

In a very short while, the child ceases to wake up afraid in the middle of the night, so absolutely secure does he feel with the other children. Group living makes it possible for the kibbutz child to enjoy more of that inner security which we put so much stress on, but which many middle-class Canadian infants, alone with their anxieties in their own rooms, fail to find.

Kibbutz children are actually much closer to their parents in some ways than most Canadian children, if not to their parents as persons, then as members of the community. It is the kibbutz which is central to all learning, formal and informal, in the children's village. From the toddlers' school on, the children take daily hikes to visit their parents at work. At the machine shops, the barns, the olive groves, the children are stopped by adults, talked to, joked with, praised, perhaps asked to lend a hand.

Thus the child is made to feel a welcome and important part of his father's and mother's occupational activities, and those of the whole community, an experience which most Canadian children would probably envy. So, too, all big communal events in the kibbutz, such as holiday celebrations, are related to work that parents and children both have a part in such as the festival of the first fruits, arbor day, or the harvest festival.

It is apparent that the significant persons in the child's life, in addition to his parents whose roles have already been discussed, are his nurses, nursery and kindergarten teachers, and his group. If only because he spends most of his time with them, a child's nurses and teachers are parental surrogates in almost every sense of the term. They care for almost all his physical desires and needs. They feed, bathe, and clothe him, and nurse him when he is ill.

They rear him and, hence, care for many of his social needs. Most of the child's knowledge of his physical environment, his skills, and his knowledge of his own kibbutz culture, including its values, behavior patterns, and techniques, are taught him by these women. Finally, since they are for him psychologically significant persons, they are of great importance for his emotional development.

The nurses and nursery teachers institute most of his disciplines, impose upon him most of his restrictions, teach him and all the while reward and punish him, express approval and disapproval, give affection and withhold affection.

The other group of significant persons in the child's life is his own group of peers. Almost all the child's daily activities, his experiences, and his belongings are shared either voluntarily or under compulsion with his own age group. It is little wonder, therefore, that the children are obviously ambivalent towards each other. It is exciting to share experiences, but it is frustrating to share one's beloved nurse or the only toy auto in the dormitory, or the only blue book trimmed in yellow.

The sharing of the latter objects is usually motivated only by adult compulsion or persuasion, and leads to frequent and intense fighting and quarreling within his group. This in turn intensifies the child's relationship to his parent, the only object he need not share unless he has a sibling. But it is the sharing of experience that accounts for the desire of the children to return to the dormitory in the evening, and the great enthusiasm with which they greet their fellows as they enter. Parents are fine for so long, but after that one wants one's friends: this seems to be the attitude of the children.

Something like two hundred or so kibbutzim care for their children in the manner I've described. In recent years, Gesher Haziv, a kibbutz that was founded largely by North American settlers, along with some other kibbutzim, has adopted the system of children sleeping in rooms adjoining those of their parents. The score stands something like 220 to eight on this issue.

For the past few years, a group in Kfar Blum, another kibbutz, has agitated long and assiduously for the adoption of such a system. Its most vocal advocates were people from the United States, although there were some "North Americans" who did not hold with them, and there were many "Englishmen" and "Latvians" who did. Thus, while there was some basis to the thought that the kibbutz was split along lines of national origin, the issue really cut across them.

The arguments for the change ran something like this: First, it was alleged that it was more natural for children to sleep near their parents. Then it was said that the night care of the children was hopelessly inadequate. There were many instances where a child had cried for a long time before the night watch attendant came to his aid. On psychological grounds, it was argued that children between the ages of two and five were asocial creatures and needed to have a place where they could get away from their fellows.

Instances of bed-wetting and thumb-sucking were cited as evidence of the insecurity of the children. It was suggested that the children could be watched more carefully by a mother who puts her children to bed at home, than by one who puts them to bed in a Children's House. Parents who have three or more children, it was pointed out, have to go to three or more different houses to put their children to bed. This involves quite a bit of physical exertion and discomfort, especially in the rainy season. Bedding the youngsters under one roof would make life easier.

It was indicated that the Children's Houses, at bedtime, are often noisy, whereas quiet at this hour is desirable for growing children. Another allegation was that the new method would make the mother happier. These, in substance, were the arguments for the change.

The defenders of the status quo also had an arsenal of arguments. They felt, as do conservatives the world over, that an institution as widely accepted as the Kibbutz system for the sleeping of children must have intrinsic merit apart from the forces of inertia.

They argued that the psychological argument was fallacious, inasmuch as the fundamental security or insecurity of the child was determined by the stability of the family unit, especially that of the parents; that while the present system might not be the best possible for the child at each stage of his development, yet it offered no insuperable emotional difficulties to the child rooted in a happy family. It was argued that if the children slept in the parents' quarters, the parents would have to stay home with crying babies, and would be prevented from attending meetings and social and cultural events.

The allegation was made that the whole plan, as suggested, was nothing more than an elaborate rationalization to enable the individual to return to the familiar social and familial patterns that he knew in Europe. Further, the execution of such a plan at Kfar Blum would entail an investment of tens or hundreds of thousands of Israeli pounds, which the economy could ill afford. The final argument was that kibbutz children,

CLASS IN COOKERY

POTATO PUDDING

three large potatoes grated
three eggs
four large teaspoons of flour
salt and pepper to taste
one teaspoon of baking powder
one tablespoon of oil

Blend ingredients in a bowl, and pour into well-oiled baking pan. Bake in oven at three hundred and fifty degrees for one hour.

Mrs. Morris Gotlib,
254 Searle Avenue, Toronto.

COFFEE CAKE

one cup shortening
one cup brown sugar
one cup white sugar
three eggs
one-half teaspoon ginger
one-half teaspoon nutmeg
one teaspoon vanilla
three cups flour
one teaspoon baking powder
one teaspoon baking soda
one-half teaspoon salt
one teaspoon cinnamon
one cup strong, cold coffee
one-half cup walnuts

Cream shortening, gradually adding brown, and white sugar. Beat until light and fluffy. Add eggs one at a time, beating after each. Add combined sifted dry ingredients, alternately with coffee. Add vanilla; stir in chopped walnuts. Mix well. Pour into a well-greased, floured, nine-by-thirteen-inch pan. Bake at three hundred and fifty degrees for one hour.

Mrs. E. Andes,
4500 Linton Avenue, Montreal.

PEARS WITH CHEESE TOAST

eight canned pear halves
one cup of pear juice and water
one-half cup of granulated sugar
two tablespoons of cornstarch
one cup of port wine
one-quarter cup warmed brandy eight finger-length pieces of cheddar cheese
one tablespoon lemon juice

Mix juice from canned pears with enough water to make one cup, if there is not enough. Mix sugar with cornstarch and combine pear juice, sugar, and cornstarch in skillet. Cook over medium heat until thickened, and stir in wine slowly. Blend and stir in lemon juice. Add pears and simmer five to eight minutes until they are heated through. Pour warmed brandy over pears and ignite. Serve with cheddar cheese and toast.

CLASS IN COOKERY

one and three-quarters cups lukewarm water
three eggs
one-half teaspoon salt
six to seven cups flour
two packages dry yeast
one-quarter cup oil
three tablespoons sugar
one tablespoon sugar

Put the water, the three tablespoons sugar, and yeast in a bowl and let stand for ten minutes till well dissolved. In another bowl beat eggs, oil, salt, and the one tablespoonful of sugar until lemon-coloured. When yeast mixture has risen add to egg mixture. Gradually add flour and beat well. When dough can be handled and will not stick, knead for five minutes. Pat with oil, cover with a towel, put aside, and let rise to double in size. Knead again and let rise. This will make three small loaves. Braid each small loaf and place it in a slightly-greased, three-by-eight-inch loaf pan. Bake at 375 degrees for fifteen minutes. Lower heat to 350 degrees and bake for twenty minutes longer.

Mrs. N. Richler,
5610 Decelles Avenue, Montreal.

HONEY CAKE

one pound of honey
one cup of sugar
one cup of cool strong coffee
one heaping tablespoon of cocoa two eggs
one-half cup oil
two and one-half cups sifted flour three teaspoons baking powder three teaspoons baking soda pinch of cinnamon
one teaspoon vanilla
one pinch of nutmeg
grated orange rind or one teaspoon of orange juice
grated lemon rind
one-half grated apple

Leave coffee and coca mixture standing while batter is being prepared. Put the honey into a bowl, add sugar gradually, then add eggs separately. Add oil and the coffee and cocoa mixture and blend throughly. Add sifted flour, baking powder, baking soda, vanilla, cinnamon, nutmeg, orange rind, lemon rind, and grated apple. Mix all ingredients together. Pour into an eight-by-eight-inch pan, greased well with oil or butter. Bake for one hour at three hundred and twenty-five degrees to three hundred and fifty degrees.

Mrs. Ernest Marmurek,
64 Maxwell Avenue, Toronto.

SOUR CREAM CHEESE PANCAKES

one-half pound cottage cheese
three eggs
one-half cup sour cream
one-eighth teaspoon baking powder
three-quarters cup flour
salt, sugar, pepper to taste

Blend cheese and sour cream. Add beaten eggs, salt, sugar, and pepper. Add flour sifted with baking powder and mix well. If batter is too thick add a little water. Pour tablespoons of batter into pre-heated frying pan which has been well-greased with butter. Fry until brown on both sides.

Conveners were: Mesdames Elliott Fineberg, 6196 Oakland Road; and Jack Stone, 117 Connaught Avenue. Mrs. Kofsky was second president of District Number 22; past president, and charter member of Eglinton Chapter; past president of Women's committee of Toronto; past third-vice-president, Eastern Canadian Council; executive member of Bnai Brith District Number One; is a member of the board of Federation of Jewish Women's Organizations in Toronto; chairman of Bnai Brith annual bazaar, and carnival; and of donors of the Candlelight Ball; has held high positions in Bnai Brith Youth Organization, Covenant Breakfast, Israel Bonds, donor leadership training, membership vocational service, Hillel Foundation, and carnival; was on the New Mount Sinai Hospital Auxiliary planning board as membership chairman; vice-president of York General Hospital Auxiliary; district chairman of United Appeal, and of United Jewish Appeal Campaign.

Miss Leslie Heather Isaacs, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence C. Isaacs, 21 Orange Street, Saint John, N. B., volunteered for the program known as Sherut La'am, in which Jewish Canadian and American people, between the ages of eighteen and twenty-eight years are placed in jobs in Israel for one year, according to their interests and abilities. The group of which Miss Isaacs is a part, joined by another New Brunswicker, Robert Freeman, of Shediac, left New York for Israel September 14, and will return in August of 1966. They will receive a three-month orientation period, introducing them to the Hebrew language and the Israeli way of life. They will take part in the reclamation of an ancient forest in the Hills of Galilee and spend two weeks in the Archaeological Field School at Ein Gedi. Miss Isaacs attended Pierce Secretarial School in Boston after graduating from Saint John High School, followed by a position as private secretary to Dr. William Constable, director of the department of radiotherapy at the Halifax Infirmary. She also supervised the secretarial staff of this department from September 1963 to May 1965. She is a member of the National Registry of Medical Secretaries of Boston, Mass.

GOLD-HAMMERLING ROSENBERG-HAMMERLING

The double marriage of Dr. Dorothy Judith Hammerling, to Captain Edgar Gold; and Miss Victoria Gail Hammerling, to Dr. Edwin Michael Rosenberg, was solemnized on Sunday, June 27, at half-past five o'clock, at Shaar Shalom Synagogue, in Halifax, N. S., by Rabbi Isaac Freeman, assisted by Cantor I. Perlin. The brides are the daughters of Dr. James and Dr. Anne Hammerling, 6777 Quinpool Road, Halifax. Captain Gold is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Gold, of Melbourne, Australia; and Dr. Rosenberg is the son of Dr. and Mrs. Bernard Rosenberg, of Forest Hills, N. Y. Given in marriage by her father, Dr. Judith Hammerling, the elder sister, was gowned in a sheath of white, peau de soie, with a very full overskirt ending in a chapel train appliqued with Alencon lace. Her heirloom cathedral mantilla was of that lace; and she carried an arm bouquet of white roses with drifts of deep pink roses. Her attendants were Miss Rona Singerman, cousin of the bride; and Miss Marlene Goldfarb, of Halifax. They wore identical gowns, with bodices of white chiffon over silk linen, embroidered with pink rosettes, and trimmed with green velvet; and long, deep-pink, chiffon skirts. Their headdresses were pale pink organza chignons with organza roses and short veils. Each carried a cascade bouquet of deep-pink Sweetheart roses, and stephanotis. The best man for Captain Gold was Captain Barry Weldon, of Melbourne, Australia. Both were in the uniform of the Israeli Merchant Navy. Miss Victoria Hammerling was given in marriage by her father. Her sheath gown was of white silk and Alencon lace, with a very full overskirt forming a chapel train. Matching fabric was designed in a panel effect across the back of the bodice, continuing as a cathedral train. Pearl-bead trimming decorated the panel. Her shoulder-length veil of tulle illusion was trimmed with seed-pearl-beads and flowers of Alencon lace; and she carried a colonial bouquet of pale-pink gladioli, and Sweetheart roses. Her attendants were Miss Mary Stewart, and Miss Susan Gordon; both of Halifax. They wore identical gowns with white chiffon bodices over silk linen, embroidered with pink rosettes, and trimmed with green velvet; and long, deep-pink, chiffon skirts; also pink organza headpieces; and carried cascade bouquets of pink Sweetheart roses, and stephanotis. Paul Rosenberg, of Forest Hills, was best man. The altar, and canopy were decorated with garlands and standards of white chrysanthemums and snapdragons. Screens of greenery were trimmed with white, and pink roses, and carnations interlaced. Ray Fahie was soloist, accompanied by Mrs. M. D. Giroir. Kenneth Blake played the flute. Afterwards a dinner reception was held at the Lord Nelson Hotel. Pink, and white roses, pom-poms, and carnations, arranged with greenery, were the wedding flowers. Captain Barry Weldon proposed the toast. Dr. Anne Hammerling, mother of the brides, wore a gown of sea-green silk. Raised, jewelled, and beaded floral sprays cascaded from the right shoulder to the hemline of the gown. The fitted bodice was draped towards the back in free flowing panels. She had a matching crown; and carried a green-tipped orchid with her purse. Mrs. Joseph Gold, mother of the groom, wore a long gown of peau de soie in deep blue, with diamente, and A-line skirt; also a matching coronet; and carried a white orchid, tipped with pink, fastened to her purse. Mrs. Bernard Rosenberg, mother of the groom, was in a long, pale-pink, silk linen, sheath gown, worked with white embroidery; with a pink pleated hat; and carried a white and pink orchid with her purse. Captain Edgar Gold and Mrs. Gold spent their wedding trip in New York, and Europe; the bride departing in a beige, silk tweed ensemble; with a white orchid corsage. The bride is a graduate of Dalhousie University, in Halifax, Faculty of Medicine. The groom is a graduate of Dartmouth College, in England; and is in the Israeli Merchant Navy. They have taken up residence in Israel. Dr. and Mrs. Edwin Michael Rosenberg spent their wedding trip in England, and Continental Europe; the bride going away in a blue, printed silk ensemble; and a corsage of Sweetheart roses. They have taken up residence in Halifax. The bride received the Bachelor of Arts degree from Dalhousie University; and is continuing with post-graduate studies in English. The groom, a graduate of Dalhousie Medical School, is a resident physician at the Victoria General Hospital. In Halifax for the marriage were: Mrs. Hyman Singerman, and her daughter, Miss Rona Singerman; and Jan Reiss; all cousins of the bride; all of Montreal, Quebec.

former's daughter, Miss Riva Crystal to the latter's son, Barry Goffman. Mrs. Crystal wore a white, knitted suit, worked with silver-coloured thread; and her flowers were a corsage of pink carnations. Mrs. Goffman, wearing a blue, lace, sheath dress, had a corsage of blue and white carnations. Miss Crystal, the bride-elect, wore an aquamarine-blue dress, made with a Guipure lace bodice; and peau de soie skirt; with a corsage of white carnations. Pink, and white roses, carnations, and pom-poms beautified the table. The marriage will take place on November 14, at Shomrim Laboker Synagogue.

Mr. and Mrs. George Nashen, 5631 Cork Street, celebrated the bar-mitzvah of their son, Stanley, who was called to the Reading of the Law, at Beth Zion Synagogue. He is the brother of Barry, aged ten and one-half years; Jeffrey, eight and one-half; and Glenn, three and one-half; grandson of Mrs. Bertha Schertzer, of Boston, Mass., who was here for the celebration; and the late Samuel Schertzer; and of Avrum Nachsen, 2720 Bedford Road, and the late Mrs. Manya Nachsen. Kiddush was observed. That evening Mr. and Mrs. Nashen were hosts to one hundred and eighty guests at a dinner dance in the Synagogue hall. The bar-mitzvah boy spoke. Centrepieces of blue, yellow, and white pom-poms, carnations, and roses, combined with a blue, yellow, and white cake, beautified the table. Here for the celebration were: uncles, and aunts, Dr. and Mrs. Max Schertzer, and Arnold, Stanley, Martin, and Jay; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Schertzer, and Gail; and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Schertzer, and Marjorie, Steven, and Ann; all of Boston.

La Congrégation Sépharade de Langue Française vous offre ses souhaits!

La Congrégation Sépharade de Langue Française, en vous saluant, a le plaisir de vous annoncer que les Offices religieux de Rosh Hashana et Yom Kippour se dérouleront comme à l'habitude, en la chapelle de Beth Hamedrash Hagadol, 4605, rue Mackenzie.

Les offices auront lieu: dimanche 26, à 6 h. p.m.; lundi 27, à 8 h. a.m.; 6 h. p.m.; mardi 28, à 8 h. a.m.; 6 h. p.m.

Yom Kippour: Mardi, 5, Kol Nidré, à 6 h. p.m.; mercredi, 6, Shahrit, à 8 h. a.m.; Moussof, à 12.30 h. p.m.; Minha, à 3 h. p.m.; Nehila, à 6 h. p.m.; Shofar, à 7.10 h. p.m.

Souccoth: lundi et mardi, 11 et 12 octobre, à 8 h. p.m.; 6 h. a.m.; lundi et mardi, 18 et 19 octobre à 8 h. a.m.; 5.40 h. p.m.

Hakafot, de Sinhat Torah, auront lieu lundi soir, 18 octobre, après l'office de Arbit.

Il est inutile d'attirer à nouveau l'attention de nos frères Sépharades de langue française sur la nécessité de se grouper nombreux en une congrégation forte et homogène, en vue de conserver vivaces nos traditions et nos rites ancestraux. Ces traditions se perdront sûrement si nous ne sommes pas en mesure de les léguer à nos enfants. Ces derniers devront rester les sûrs garants de l'existence du rite sépharade, qui, au long des siècles a acquis des titres de noblesse.

Aussi, notre congrégation avec une persévérance sans défaillance, essaie depuis plus de trois ans de maintenir le foyer vivant du sépharadisme, en dépit de la carence et la négligence de plusieurs. La poignée de gens de bonne volonté qui se dévoue avec courage, ne ménage ni son temps ni ses efforts pour maintenir des offices religieux tous les samedis et jours de fête. C'est pourquoi nous vous disons: "Il est grand temps de vous réveiller et de joindre nos rangs", afin de créer un centre spécifiquement sépharade, et nous avons besoin de votre aide morale et financière.

D'autre part, un Conseil représentant toutes les congrégations sépharades de langue française a été formé avec un secrétariat permanent. Nous avons des délégués auprès du Vaad Hair, (Tribunal Rabbinique), à qui nous avons demandé de nous aider à trouver des solutions aux nombreux problèmes qui sont:

1. — Trouver du travail pour les Shomrés Sabbat; 2. — L'attribution d'une parcelle de terrain au cimetière juif; 3. — Enregistrement des naissances et mariages par un chef spirituel sépharade; 4. — Education de nos enfants, préparation à la Bar Mitzva; 5. — Colonies de vacances; 6. — Salle de fêtes et de réunions religieuses; 7. — Service Social; 8. — Création d'une boucherie Cacher tenue par un sépharade; 9. — Edition d'un Bulletin de langue française. Plusieurs des problèmes mentionnés ont déjà trouvé partiellement leurs solutions.

Sachez chers amis que sans votre support tous nos efforts seront voués à l'échec. Depuis plus de dix ans plusieurs associations sépharades ont disparu par négligence et désintéressement de leurs membres. Il est temps que les 10,000 sépharades de langue française de Montréal s'organisent pour créer un temple digne d'eux. Le but doit être de maintenir nos traditions sépharades vivantes.

Croyez chers membres et amis, à nos sentiments les plus cordiaux. Tizko Lechanim Rabott. CONGREGATION SEPHARADE DE LANGUE FRANÇAISE — Pour le Comité.

GOODIS-BOSEM

The marriage of Miss Tova Bosem, daughter of Mrs. Rachel Bosem, 6187 Deacon Road, and of Miami Beach, Florida, and the late Simon David Bosem, to Brian Norman Goodis, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jack B. Goodis, 75 Linwood Crescent, and of Hollywood, Florida, was solemnized at the Queen Elizabeth Hotel, on Thursday, June 24, at half-past seven o'clock, by Rabbi Charles Bender, assisted by Dr. Solomon Frank, Rabbi, and Cantor Goodman Aronson. The bride was given in marriage by her mother, and her brother-in-law, Harry Abelson. She wore a white, peau de soie gown, fashioned in Spanish style, the fitted bodice trimmed with a neckline of ruffled net and Guipure lace; and the skirt with similar tiers around the hemline. Her headdress was a Spanish mantilla of sheer lace; and she carried a prayer book with white orchids. Mrs. Harry Abelson was her sister's matron of honour, gowned in apricot-coloured chiffon, with Empire bodice; and sleeves with accordion pleats. She had a picture hat; and carried a bouquet of Sweetheart roses. The bridesmaids were: Mrs. Lionel Bosem, sister-in-law of the bride; Mrs. Stephen Goodis, sister-in-law of the groom; and Miss Bronie Abelson, niece of the bride. Mrs. Bosem wore a Grecian-styled gown of muted pink shades and orange-coloured chiffon, topped by a free-flowing, sleeveless coat of the same material; with a matching headdress. Mrs. Goodis wore a sleeveless gown of pink satin which had an overskirt of embroidered tulle. Her hair was bound by clusters of Sweetheart roses. Miss Abelson wore a gown of Swiss, embroidered organza in shades of yellow, and green; with a sleeveless green jacket; and back panels; also a matching headdress. Each carried Sweetheart roses. Stephen Goodis was his brother's best man. The ushers were: Lionel Bosem, brother of the bride; Stanley Katz, Richard Goodis, Eric Goodis, Harry Fligel, Sidney Spilberg, Allan Titleman; cousins of the groom; Edward Berger, Larry Cohen, and Donald Nyveen. White chrysanthemums and tangerine-coloured Tea roses decorated the arch at the altar. An orchestra played. Two hundred guests were received where candles in candelabra, and tangerine-coloured Tea roses formed the decorations. Mrs. Bosem, mother of the bride, was attired in a sheath gown of brocade in shades of gold, orange, and green; with a hat of transparent net. Mrs. Goodis, mother of the groom, wore a sheath gown of gold-coloured and rose brocade; also a flowered headdress. Their flowers were corsages of white orchids. SILVERMAN-MARX

The marriage of Miss Lynn Marx, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Marx, Junior, of Purchase, N. Y., to Jon David Silverman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Percy Harold Silverman, 4695 St. Catherine Road, Montreal, was solemnized at the Regency Hotel, in New York, on Thursday, August 26, at seven o'clock, by Dr. Julius Mark, senior Rabbi, of Temple Emanu-El, in New York. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore an antique-white, satin gown, made with a fitted bodice; and long sleeves of heirloom rose point and Duchess lace. Her tulle illusion veil was caught by a coronet of the same lace; and she carried a cascade bouquet of lilies-of-the valley and a white orchid. Mrs. Michael Buchsbaum, cousin of the bride, of New York, was maid of honour. She wore a pink, linen gown; with a pink hair-bow and tulle veil; and carried white, red, and pink carnations, and roses. Mrs. Joseph Silverman, sister-in-law of the groom; Mrs. Edgar Liberman, cousin of the bride; Miss Linda Berry; and Miss Andrea Rudiger were attendants. Each wore a rose-coloured, linen gown, made with cap sleeves trimmed with flowers; and a bell-shaped skirt. They had matching hair-bows; and carried cascade bouquets of red roses, and pink carnations. Joseph Silverman was his brother's best man. The ushers were: Lawrence Marx, Third, brother of the bride; Joel Bell, Howard Scott, both of Montreal; and M. Moise Lauterstein, of Texas. A replica of Trevi gardens, in Italy, composed of pink, and red carnations, and pink and rose-coloured Rubrum lilies, with fountains, formed the wedding setting. An orchestra played. One hundred and five guests were received. Mrs. Marx, mother of the bride, wore a mauve-pink, peau de soie gown; which had a bouffant skirt; and a mauve orchid was her corsage. Mrs. Silverman, mother of the groom, wore a champagne-coloured, peau de soie gown, designed with a lace bodice; and had a corsage of white orchids. Mr. and Mrs. Jon David Silverman spent their wedding trip in Portugal and Spain, having flown via B.O.A.C. Air Lines; the bride going away in a pale blue, knitted suit; with a corsage of white gardenias. They have taken up residence in New York. There for the marriage were: parents of the groom; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Silverman, 687 Alexis Nihon Boulevard, brother, and sister-in-law of the groom; Mr. and Mrs. Louis D. Satim, 6201 Cote St. Luc Road; Miss Rena M. Silverman, 1371 Lajoie Avenue; uncle, and aunts of the groom; Mr. and Mrs. Ben Silverman, 6066 Wilderton Crescent; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph. N. Frank, 28 Sunset Avenue; Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Izenberg, 575 Glengarry Street; Mr. and Mrs. George Scott, 3980 Cote des Neiges Road; all of Montreal; Dr. Minerva Gordon, Mrs. Bernard Freedman, Mr. and Mrs. William Pite; uncle, and aunts of the groom, all of Miami Beach, Florida; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Schwenk, Mr. and Mrs. Ben Garb, Mr. and Mrs. M. Bonin, all cousins of the groom; Mrs. H. A. Rosenthal, aunt of the groom; all of Trenton, N. J.; Mr. and Mrs. Victor Cabot, of West Orange, N. J.; Mr. and Mrs. Paul J. Fiebleger, of New Rochelle, N. Y.; cousins of the groom; and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bell, of Toronto, Ont. Mrs. Silverman graduated from Rye Country Day School, in Rye, N. Y., and in 1964 from Hood College, in Frederick, Maryland. Her father is a vice-president and director of United Merchants and Manufacturers, Incorporated; and president of the Jewish Home And Hospital For The Aged; and a trustee of the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies of New York. Mr. Silverman graduated from McGill University with the Bachelor of Commerce degree; and from Cornell University, in Ithaca, N. Y., with the Master's degree. He is a doctorate candidate at New York in Economics and Marketing.

MARIASINE-KASVAN

The marriage of Miss Geraldine Kasvan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Abe Kasvan, 6780 Clanranald Avenue, to Fred Mariasine, son of Mrs. Sophie Mariasine, 4080 Plamondon Street, and the late Louis Mariasine, was solemnized at Young Israel Synagogue, on Sunday, March 28, at six o'clock, by Rabbi Mendell Lewittes, assisted by Cantor Z. Halperin. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a white, satin gown. The bodice of lace ribbon was made with a round neckline, and bell-shaped sleeves; and the full skirt finished as a long train. Her short, tulle illusion veil was attached to a seed-pearl-beaded crown; and she carried a prayer book with white orchids. Mrs. Norman Mariasine, sister-in-law of the groom, was matron of honour. She wore a pale blue, brocade, sheath gown; and a flowered headpiece; and carried red roses. Renee Scholzberg, aged six years, cousin of the groom, was flower girl, wearing a white, organza dress; with a matching head-band; and carried a basket of pink, and white rose petals. Norman Mariasine was his brother's best man. The ushers were: A. Segal, Colman Klein, cousins of the bride; Marvin Schwartz, Howard Downer, Jerry Dubin, Jack Abrams, cousins of the groom; and Sandor Klein, and Irwin Frank. Joshua Pinchuk, aged six years, cousin of the groom, was ring-bearer. The wedding flowers were pink, and white carnations and roses. There was orchestra music. Two hundred and fifty guests were received. Mrs. Kasvan, mother of the bride, wore a blue, beaded, peau de soie sheath gown; with a beaded head-band; and carried white orchids with her purse. Mrs. Mariasine, mother of the groom, wore a turquoise-blue, beaded, peau de soie sheath gown; with a blue hat; and her corsage was of white orchids. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Mariasine spent their wedding trip at the Saxony Hotel, in Miami Beach, Florida; having flown via Eastern Air Lines; the bride going away in a three-piece, white knitted suit, worked with silver-coloured thread. ★ ALLIED JEWISH COMMUNITY ★

Services: Lewis Shapiro was elected president of Mount Sinai Sanatorium in Ste. Agathe to succeed Bernard J. Lande, now honorary president. The Quebec Legislature has approved the change of name from "Sanatorium" to "Hospital". For years Mount Sinai was devoted to the care of tuberculosis patients. Since the average hospital stay of such patients has been reduced from two years to eight months, the hospital has been able to turn over a number of its beds for patients with other chest diseases. Mr. Shapiro has been active in the Federation of Jewish Community Services and Combined Jewish Appeal for many years; was Mount Sinai vice-president, treasurer, and secretary, and chairman of the budget committee in the Joint Campaign for Combined Jewish Appeal and United Israel Appeal; is a former winner of the Michael Hirsch Trophy as the best campaigner; director of Maimonides Hospital and Home for the Aged; member of the YM-YWHA; Bnai Brith; Hillsdale Golf and Country Club; Greystone Curling Club; and of Shaare Zion Synagogue. Re-elected and newly-elected members of Mount Sinai board of administration are: Abe Bronfman, Bernard J. Lande, honorary presidents; Reuben Fisher, first vice-president and chairman of the executive committee; Ben Chazonoff, second, and chairman of buildings and grounds committee; Joseph Rothbart, secretary and executive director; Sam. What is the A. B. C. or Audit Bureau of Circulations, and what is its importance?

A. The A. B. C. is a voluntary association of major publishers, advertisers, national and local; and advertising agencies, working together to police circulation claims, and to translate them into facts.

Q. Why are circulation facts so important?

A. Circulation figures are the only honest basis on which print advertising is sold and purchased. Publishers base their prices for advertising on the amount of their circulation, and its quality. An advertiser buys circulation. A. B. C. circulation facts tell him the exact amount at any time.

Q. How does an advertiser know that this is really so?

A. A. B. C. publishers keep exact records of all circulation receipts for subscriptions and single copy sales. These can tell him, too, whether the circulation is sold without a premium, or with one, to induce payment; or whether the circulation is composed of membership in an organization; or whether it is sold on its merit alone. Was the subscription sold on a special rate? Was it paid by mail directly to the publisher, or to an agent? These are just some of the categories of subscription payments which are recorded.

Q. Why are some of these answers so important?

A. Sometimes these answers can tell an advertiser whether the subscriber needs to be coaxed into continuing, or starting. Are subscribers voluntarily buying the publication? Do they need a cut-rate or an added attraction to keep on?

Q. How are the figures checked?

A. The publisher checks his figures, and reports them twice a year to the head office of the A. B. C. These are audited once a year by travelling A. B. C. auditors, who check the names, the receipts, the printing invoices, the bank deposits, the paper used, the ink used, the postage receipts — all of these show the number of copies printed or mailed; and paid for. If an A.B.C. field auditor goes to work for a publication whose books he has audited within a year or so, there is an automatic re-audit by another auditor. An auditor does not audit the figures of any publication for more than two consecutive years.

Q. Does the A. B. C. allow past-due subscriptions?

A. The A. B. C. rules state that all subscriptions up for renewal must be paid within three months of the expiry date. The publisher must keep track of each one. These are considered paid, but not completely so, until paid in full, for the term to come.

Q. Are new subscriptions considered as paid?

A. Not until payment is received for the term in advance.

Q. What does this cost the publisher?

A. The publisher considers the membership as his investment to protect the investment of each advertiser. The publisher pays quarterly dues; the cost of the auditing done in his office, by the hour; and the cost of checking done further, at the A. B. C. head office. If further checking is needed, the publisher pays that cost, too. An auditor spends several days in the Canadian Jewish Review office each year.

Q. Are these the only costs?

A. The greatest cost to the publisher is to see that the records are kept in order and up to date. The Canadian Jewish Review addressograph plates are posted to show the date and method and amount of payment; and the date of the subscription, and the length of its term. A publication must carry on the address label all information that the auditor would need to guide him in checking. A publication which sells subscriptions on short-term, or with a premium, or in combination with other publications, for instance, will carry all that information and more, on the address label, coded in some way.

Q. What do A. B. C. reports and statements say about the Canadian Jewish Review?

A. They tell at a quick glance the provincial break-down; the amount sold in a period; that the Canadian Jewish Review never sells a subscription on a premium; never with a cut rate; never jointly with another publication; never as part of membership in an organization.

The Canadian Jewish Review is sold on its own merits, and always has been.
It has no affiliation with any organization.

A.B.C. reports and statements supply facts to advertisers.
These facts need to be known for advertising money to be spent wisely and honestly.

A. B. C. publications can never guarantee results. They do guarantee readership.

The Canadian Jewish Review is in its 22nd year of supplying facts to advertisers, investing to protect investments.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only publication reaching the general Jewish community in Canada, which can provide audited, paid, A. B. C. circulation facts and figures for the protection of each advertiser.

MARRIAGES

KELTZ-SPIRO

The marriage of Miss Joan Spiro, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Charles H. Spiro, of Ottawa, Ont., to Dr. Irwin Keltz, son of Mrs. Henry Keltz, 528 St. Clements Avenue, and of the late Mr. Keltz, was solemnized at the Agudath Israel Synagogue, in Ottawa, on August 15, at six o'clock, by Rabbi B. Friedberg, assisted by Cantor H. Aptowitzer. The bride was given in marriage by her parents. She wore a white lace-silk gown, which was designed with a scalloped neckline; and short sleeves; with an A-line skirt, which terminated in a long, matching train, covered with lace. Her finger-tip, tulle, illusion veil was attached to a pearl crown; and her bouquet was of white orchids, and stephanotis, with a large white bow. Mrs. Fred Cogan (Lynne), cousin of the bride, was matron of honour. She wore a royal blue, peau de soie gown, which was styled with a round neckline; and a sleeveless, beaded bodice. The skirt was straight, and had slits at the sides. Her headdress matched, with a tulle veil. Mrs. Dennis Beallor (Florence), and Miss Esther Keltz, sisters of the bride, were bridesmaids. Mrs. Beallor wore a pale blue peau de soie silk gown, which was fashioned with a round neckline; and a sleeveless, beaded bodice; and a straight skirt. She had a matching bow headdress. Miss Keltz wore an ice-blue, iridescent peau de soie gown, which had a round neckline; and a sleeveless beaded bodice. Her A-line skirt terminated in a small train. She had a matching bow headdress. They all carried bouquets of pink Sweetheart roses. Dr. Maurice Keltz, brother of the groom, was best man. The ushers were: Lloyd Spiro, brother of the bride; Larry Keltz, brother of the groom; Marshal Keltz, Murray Roher, Ian Roher, and Howard Roher, all cousins of the groom; and Dr. Jerry Gold, and Dr. Norman Kerbel. Two hundred and fifty guests were received. Mrs. Spiro, mother of the bride, wore a pale blue peau de soie gown, which was designed with a scooped neckline; and short sleeves, on the beaded, lace bodice; with an A-line skirt. She had a matching head-piece; and had a matching orchid wristlet. Mrs. Keltz, mother of the groom, wore a blue ribbon-lace, re-beaded, gown, which was fashioned with a scalloped neckline; short sleeves; and an A-line skirt. She had a matching head-piece; and a matching orchid wristlet. Dr. and Mrs. Irwin Keltz spent their wedding trip in Israel; Paris, France; and London, England; with the bride departing in a two-piece, powder-blue knitted suit. She had black patent leather accessories, and had a white orchid corsage. They are residing in Toronto.

Rabbi Monson is a founder and secretary of the Northwestern General Hospital; a director of the St. Alban's Boys Club; an active executive member of the Blood Donors' service committee of the Canadian Red Cross; Chaplain of the Hebrew Club for the Blind, CNIB; Chaplain of the General Wingate Branch Number 256, Royal Canadian Legion; national executive member, Zionist Organization; and luncheon club chairman, Toronto Zionist Council.

★ SHOMRAI SHABOTH ★

Synagogue, Rabbi Gedalia Felder: The Synagogue, now in its new building at 585 Glengrove Avenue West, was established more than three-quarters of a century ago, and the first services of this group took place in a building on Richmond Street, on top of a blacksmith shop. From there, they moved to Queen Street, and later to a permanent Synagogue building on Chestnut Street. Shomrai Shaboth was the first Orthodox congregation to found a traditional religious Hebrew School in Toronto, this being the first such school; and established the first Orthodox Jewish Cemetery on Jones Avenue, south of Danforth Avenue. Rabbi Joseph Weinreb was the pioneering Orthodox Rabbi in Toronto, and later, served as president of the Toronto Orthodox Rabbinate. In 1933, the Synagogue moved to 225 Brunswick Avenue, where services are held to-day. The president at that time was the late Chaim Schwartz. Rabbi Felder became the leader in 1950. He was born in Poland; and is an author, and commentator, on the daily and Sabbath laws, and the history of Jewish prayers; on the laws of adoption and conversion in Judaism; and in October, his seventh book, will be in print. Rabbi Felder is the president of the Ontario Division of the Rabbinical Council. M. Solomon is the Cantor, since 1950; and came to Toronto after the war, from Czechoslovakia. The president of the Congregation is A. S. Kling, grandson of the late Smul Z. Korn, one of the original founders. The chairman of the building campaign is C. Frileck, a son of the late S. Frileck, one of the pioneering members; and at one time, president of the Congregation. Of the early members, a few are still alive: Harry Birenbaum, still ac-something we never committed, nor could have. And twenty-five years ago there were silences in a church which should have rung out in protest against Nazi butchers who killed Jews for nothing they ever committed.

The award-winning novelist, Elie Wiesel, in a penetrating study of a survivor of the Nazi death machine, returning to his native Hungary, observes in the book, "The Town Beyond The Wall": "How can a human being remain indifferent? The executioners I understood; also the victims, though with more difficulty. But the others, all the others, those who were neither for nor against, those who sprawled in passive patience, those who told themselves, 'the storm will blow over and everything will be normal again'; those who thought they were above the battle, those who were permanently and merely spectators — all those were closed to me, incomprehensible . . .

"The spectator sees without being seen. He is there but unnoticed. The footlights hide him. He neither applauds nor hisses; his presence is evasive and commits him less than his absence might. He says neither yes nor no, not even maybe. He says nothing. He is there, but he acts as if he were not. Worse: he acts as if the rest of us were not."

In a final burst of anguish, the tragic hero cries out: "A man is a man only when he is among men. . . . A man on the sidelines is a machine for the fabrication of nothingness."

One man can make a difference. Any number of times in a lifetime we can be that one man. If Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur did not exist, it would be necessary to invent them if for no other reason than because we are living in a world of men. These Days of Awe are not "spectators" days! Man is here to be one, actively, decidedly, involved with God, the world, and his fellow.

To describe the Jews' participation in these days as non-involving, is to lead to the greatest of sins. No man can be a man and be non-involved. No Jew can be worth anything if he evades the challenges of life, as they unfold and command attention. When we stop to contemplate the world on these Days of Awe, we are reminded that we have responsibility in it and for its welfare. We can't stop the world to get off. "It's none of my business what happens to someone else" is alien to the Jews' vocabulary. If we seek to be fully in the covenant, we must be fully in the world.

But the sum of all of this depends on whether or not one man can make the difference. How does each individual react? You? Me? When the home can be reduced to a place of spectators, occupying themselves with things and not persons, perfection diminishes in proportion to the amount of involvement. When loved ones need a moment of concern from an unselfish dear one, is theirs an endless wait? Do we ever bother to remove those who are, "hooked on our fishline", or must they wiggle mercilessly like caught fish, until we decide to take them in or throw them back?

When the works of philanthropy and the institutions of spiritual responsibility plead for further and active involvement, is the sin of non-involvement committed? Is the life only a game? Faith a chance matter? Is the Jew destined to disappear anyway? The world, too. So who has to care?

Is government going to be affected by one faint voice crying out in protest against corruption and injustice? "Does it matter if I go to the polls or not?" "Who can change the routines of the 'politicos'?"

People used to excuse themselves from democratic involvement. But the essence boils down to certain straight thoughts. Democracy is only good if it involves every single citizen.

The difference between a wholesome participant and a "safe" spectator is the gap between honour and contempt. The sum of a life of non-involvement is alienation; the adding up in the goodness and sorrow of life through complete involvement is a oneness; a wholeness of purpose and being. The Talmud teaches: 'He who saves one life, is considered to have saved the entire universe. He who destroys one life is as though he had destroyed the entire world."

Emily Dickinson mused,

"If I can stop one heart from breaking,
I shall not live in vain;
If I can ease one life the aching,

MARRIAGES

FELD-BERLIN

The marriage of Miss Helen Miriam Berlin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Saul S. Berlin, 220 Lawrence Avenue East, to Ronald Feld, son of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Feld, 1392 Eglinton Avenue West, was solemnized at Beth Tzedec Synagogue, on June 29, at six o'clock, by Rabbi Stuart E. Rosenberg; and Rabbi Donald R. Berlin, brother of the bride; assisted by Cantor Joseph Cooper. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore an ivory-white, peau de soie gown, with re-embroidered lace. It was styled with a scooped neckline; and cap sleeves; on the A-line bodice; and the skirt terminated in a fish-tail train. Her fingertip tulle illusion veil was attached to a matching headdress; and she carried a bouquet of white orchids, with stephanotis and streamers. Miss Stephanie Berlin was maid of honour for her sister. Mrs. Donald R. Berlin (Norma), sister-in-law of the bride; Miss Helene Feld, sister of the groom; Mrs. Hillel Roebuck, and Miss Sheila Cameron, friends of the bride, all wore pink silk gowns; designed with scooped necklines; cap sleeves; and A-line skirts; and their headdresses were of beaded bows. Their flowers were of red Sweetheart roses, mixed with white carnations. Henry Ruschin, was best man. The ushers were: Sheldon Feld, Ian Lieberman, and Norman Grossner, all cousins of the groom; and Melvin Reingold, Murray Winkler, Stephen Brooker, Frederick Fedder, and Michael Kirshner. Standards of trees, with pink roses, were the wedding flowers. Five hundred guests were received at a dinner-dance. Mrs. Berlin, mother of the bride, wore a pink peau de soie gown, which was trimmed in Swiss beaded lace, and designed with a high neckline; and cap sleeves; and a sheath skirt. She had a matching, beaded headpiece. Mrs. Feld, mother of the groom, wore a sleeveless, dusty pink peau de soie princess gown, which was designed with a scooped neckline. Mrs. Morris Feld, grandmother of the groom, wore a pink lace sheath gown, which had a high neckline; and elbow-length sleeves. She had a matching headpiece. Each had an orchid corsage. Mr. and Mrs. Feld spent their wedding trip in the Catskill Mountains, of New York, the bride travelling in a pink, silk-linen dress, with a matching hat, with black patent leather accessories. They are residing at 64 Whitburn Crescent. Here for the celebration were: Rabbi and Mrs. Donald Berlin, brother and sister-in-law of the bride, of Nashville, Tenn.; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Fineman, Mrs. Felix Berlin, Benjamin Berlin, A. Goldenberg, Mrs. Jack Leavitt, all of Montreal, Que.; Dr. and Mrs. Samuel Riven, and Stephanie, of Nashville, Tenn., all uncles and aunts of the bride; and Miss Ida Leavitt, of New York.

Or cool one pain
Or help one fainting robin
Unto his nest again
I shall not live in vain."

John F. Kennedy remarked, "One man can make the difference, and every man should try."

Our Rabbis insisted, "In the place where there are no men strive to be a man."

On "Days of Awe" the Jew is to be a man. Fortunately, we don't have to invent Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur. They are ours for the involvement. Through them we become at one with God, the world, and our fellowmen, and so the universe is encouraged one step further towards perfection.

grown under the existing system, had managed to develop into a generation of youth of whom one could be proud.

In my opinion the kibbutz parents are richly rewarded. From all descriptions and my own observations the children turn into exceptionally courageous, self-reliant, secure, unneurotic, and deeply committed adults who find their self-realization in work and marriage. They marry in their early twenties and soon have children who in turn are brought up in the communal nurseries and schools. There are almost no divorces and adultery is rare and severely censured. The marriages are not only stable, but by Canadian standards exceptionally satisfactory; marriage is, in fact, the most important and intimate relationship of kibbutz adults.

The adults are genuinely fond of children, their own as well as others, and this interest in children develops early. Young girls in kindergarten often assist their mothers who are nurses in younger children's houses; and girls in the grammar school frequently supervise the play of nursery children. Many of the high school girls also work in the various nurseries as afternoon relief nurses and, with rare exceptions, they are warm, loving, and intelligent workers.

Later, as parents, they are warm and affectionate with their children, but relaxed and un-anxious. Yet they have no desire to return to raising them privately at home; they are well satisfied with the way they themselves were communally reared. Not having experienced deep emotional attachment to parents as the core of their own development, and presently having a full life of their own, they do not feel they are missing anything by being parted from their children.

Without doubt or hesitation parents place their new-born infants in the autonomous children's society. But would we?

I do not think that I could raise my children in such a setting. I would find the separation too difficult, the system too oppressing, and the way of life would leave me little privacy.

And yet it is difficult to look at the kibbutz society wearing my Canadian rose-coloured glasses. I have been reared and have reared my children in a different way, with different values which relate both to individual freedom and responsibility. It's not fair for me to judge this attempt to form a new Utopia, without appreciating what the members of the kibbutz have been trying to do.

In one way I envy the parents of kibbutz children who are relieved of the household and child-rearing chores, especially when there are so many exciting things I would like to do, and have no time to do them in. On the other hand I feel that there is something lost in not being involved fully in the rearing of children, from infancy to adulthood. Is there a middle way of bringing up children? The kibbutz was formed during the pioneering days of the land of Israel, when the land had to be rebuilt out of swamps, deserts, and barren fields. It was a time of challenge, endurance, and human sacrifice. These days called for new approaches to family living, and so the kibbutz family was born.

Today, when the State of Israel has emerged from the early founding days into a growing industrial urban society, the winds of change have slowly touched the lives of the kibbutz society. Within the next 50 years, we shall see a complete change in the kibbutz family system, to a way of life, which approximates our own type of family. The kibbutz system is another attempt at man's constant search for "Utopia."

Bill isn't too fond of sherry. I dote on it. On the other hand Manor Claret is too dry for me. Bill thinks it's the best wine value in Canada. I could nibble through a pound of cheese and crackers with Mazel Tov. Port is Bill's wine. We both agree on Manor Sauterne. And I haven't found anybody yet who doesn't go for the bubbly pleasure of DuBarry Sparkling. And you'll never guess the cost of this whole cellar. Try it: you're dollars too high already!

74 Sherry An appetizer wine, most popular in Canada. Serve with hors d'oeuvres, and the soup course.

74 Port A delightful dessert wine. After dinner, with snacks, with cheese—perfect!

Manor St. Davids Sauterne Chilled, it does wonders for white meat of any kind—fish, fowl or salads!

Manor St. Davids Claret Canada's most distinctive "wine of the country". Ideal with steaks, hamburgers, red meat of any kind.

Mazel Tov A rich "kosher" wine. Delicious—appeals to everyone.

DuBarry Sparkling Vin Rosé An "anytime" wine that's light and tingling on the tongue. Serve before, during and after any meal at all.

L'cha-yiem--to life!

Was it for this, they prayed,
Through tear-stained shawls
Close to the walls they swayed
To the sound of His Name,
And kissed the stones of their cage?

Was it for this, they prayed,
"To flee as a bird
To the mountain"
Their sanctuary, free
as their breath would be free?

Was it for this, they prayed
That a love that chastens
Will not spoil the hallowed hand
Held high, to hear them cry
"cha-yiem"?

It was for 'Life', our fathers prayed,
Not from a broken chalice
Not a hopeless dream.
